ARMY CHIEF LEADS IN PORTUGAL VOTE FOR A PRESIDENT

Partial Returns Give Eanes 60 Percent—Communists Suffer Serious Setback

By MARVINE BOWE
Special to The New York Times
LISBON, Monday, June 28—The Portuguese voted heavily for the law-and-order candidate, Gen. António Ramalho Eanes, in presidential elections yesterday and struck a severe blow to the Communist Party, according to a trend apparent in substantial returns.
Voters turned out in large numbers to choose the nation's first democratically elected President, who will have broad powers to govern this troubled nation for the next five years.
With more than four million votes counted, or 65 percent of the total, General Ramalho Eanes had about 60 percent. The 41-year-old chief of staff of the army seemed likely to win a majority and thus avoid a runoff election.
Radical Running Second
Running second was the radical leftist candidate, Maj. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, who had 17 percent. The ailing independent candidate, Prime Minister José Pinheiro de Azevedo, had 14 percent.
Octavio Pato of the Communist Party, who had been expected to finish second, was trailing with just under 8 percent. This was substantially below the 14.5 percent that the Communists received in the elections for a National Assembly two months ago.
"It's an unexpected shock," a prominent Communist newspaper editor said tonight. Several other party militants agreed.
The Socialist Party leader, Mário Soares, who is expected to be named Prime Minister by the new President, declared tonight that General Ramalho Eanes' "victory is a decisive step in the consolidation of democracy." In a television interview, he expressed surprise over Major Saraiva de Carvalho's share of the vote and warned him not to carry out "a campaign of agitation."
Workers Movement
Major Saraiva de Carvalho pledged to launch a mass workers movement in what could be a serious challenge to the new President.
General Ramalho Eanes had the backing of the country's three largest non-Communist parties, as well as several far-leftist groups. These parties won a total of more than 80 percent of the vote in the legislative elections in April.
If the general should not emerge with a majority in yesterday's voting, he will face a runoff vote within three weeks against his leading rival, Major Saraiva de Carvalho.

ASSEMBLY BACKS A CUT IN PENSIONS FOR NEWLY HIRED

Dip in Benefits Would Apply Mainly to Public Workers Hired After July 1

IMPASSE ON STUDY UNIT

Lower Chamber Also Votes to Extend Rent Control—Adjournment Sought

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
Special to The New York Times
ALBANY, June 27—The Assembly early today passed its version of a bill that sharply reduces pension benefits for future public employees—mainly those hired after July 1.
A partisan stalemate that stalled Senate passage of the bill all day showed signs of resolution late tonight, and the leaders of both houses told their members to prepare to stay in session past dawn tomorrow in a final effort to bring the six-month-old session to an end.
The issue in dispute is a section of the Assembly's pension bill that replaces a five-member pension study commission with a 14-member commission—a challenge to the power of the group's chairman, Otto Kinzel, that his Republican backers in the Senate refused to accept.
Compromise Sought
Negotiations tonight focused on a less drastic restructuring of the commission.
The dispute is trivial, but legislators' nerves are stretched so tight after a weekend of futile convening and recessing that agreement on even minor questions seems to elude the politically divided houses.
The Senate and Assembly had appeared close to resolving their differences over court reorganization amendments, but talks broke down tonight and it appeared likely that the amendments would not pass this year.
Almost no other issues remain. The Assembly today gave final passage to a one-year extension of the state's rent control laws, and late last night the Senate took final action on medical malpractice insurance and the Adirondack Park Agency.
Action was expected tonight on legislative allowances and the supplemental budget.
As what most legislators viewed as a wasted summer weekend drew to an end, the Capitol today resembled nothing so much as a besieged foreign outpost. Outside, on a near-perfect summer day, local residents took the sun in the park behind the Capitol and tourists posed their children for snapshots of the Albany Mall.
But inside, where the service personnel do not work on weekends, wastebaskets overflowed.

Airliner With 257 Hijacked From Athens

By The Associated Press
Hijackers seized an Air France jetliner yesterday with 257 persons aboard, forced it to refuel at Benghazi in Libya and then flew it to Entebbe Airport in Uganda, officials said early today.
Air France sources said the plane, which was carrying at least 70 Israeli passengers, had only enough fuel to last 20 minutes when it was granted permission to land.
The plane, an Aérospatiale Airbus, a twin-engine jet with a range of 3,000 miles built with the cooperation of France, West Germany, Spain, Britain and the Netherlands, began its flight from Tel Aviv, bound for Paris via Athens, and when it left Athens it had 257 people aboard, including nine Americans and 12 crew members.

The Israeli Transport Ministry reported from Tel Aviv that seven Arabs, apparently including the six hijackers, came aboard at Athens and took control.
At Benghazi, according to the Libyan Arab Revolution News Agency, the hijackers allowed a physician aboard to examine a woman, believed to be British, and she was allowed off the plane. The Israeli radio at Tel Aviv reported that the woman was an Israeli.

Originally, Air France officials said, 83 Israelis were on the plane when it began its flight at Tel Aviv. Later, it was reported that there were 70 Israelis aboard when the plane reached Libya, which is among the most militant of the Arab countries.
As concern mounted in Israel for the Israelis' safety, the French consul at Benghazi said that no passengers had been harmed and that the hijackers had allowed food and drink to be brought aboard. The consul, who joined the talks with the hijackers, also said that one of

2 Members of Middle East Airlines Crew Injured—Pilot Believed Dead

By The Associated Press
BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 27—A Boeing 707 passenger jetliner was blasted by artillery and burned to the frame today during bombardment of Beirut Airport. The airport was immediately closed indefinitely.
The four-engine Middle East Airlines jet plane had arrived from Amman, Jordan, with a three-man Lebanese crew but no passengers, the airline said. It was parked about 300 yards from the main terminal building and about 100 yards from the Saudi Air Force C-130's, one of which landed in the midst of the attack in the Lebanese civil war.
An airline spokesman said the first officer and flight engineer were seriously injured and the pilot believed killed.
[A leftist radio broadcast monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, said the pilot was "burned to death." It described the injured engineer as an American but did not identify him.]

Inner City Houses In Demand as Costs Soar in the Suburbs

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times
SAN FRANCISCO, June 25—The soaring cost of new homes around the country is stirring new interest in the neglected older homes in the heart of many American cities.
With the national median price of a new home now more than $43,000, real estate brokers say more and more middle-income Americans are taking a look at, and in many cases buying and fixing, older homes that not long ago they would have spurned for the suburbs.
In some cities, such as San Francisco, whole neighborhoods are being reclaimed by rehabilitation efforts.
The cautious new interest of the middle class in urban living, however, is causing prices of many older inner city homes to rise. It is also colliding with

Korshak's Power Rooted In Ties to Labor Leaders

By SEYMOUR M. HERSH
In October 1961, a Chicago labor lawyer named Sidney R. Korshak unexpectedly checked into the Riviera Hotel in Las Vegas. The hotel was the site of a conference of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the nation's largest union, and it was jammed.
Nevertheless, the management quickly escorted Mr. Korshak to the Presidential suite, the hotel's best. Its occupant, James R. Hoffa, then the president of the Teamsters union and presumably one of the most powerful men in America, was abruptly moved to smaller quarters across the hall.
Three months ago, Mr. Korshak again exerted his power in Las Vegas, and his target was equally impressive: the Summa Corporation, the holding company for the vast empire of the late Howard R. Hughes.

Sitting In on Meeting Of Rome Communists

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

ROME, June 27—Like their comrades around the country, the members of the Montevardo Nuovo section of the Italian Communist Party met last week to analyze election results and the work they had done for the cause.

The basement room of their headquarters in a middle-class district was decorated with a picture of the party's founder, Antonio Gramsci, an intense young face crowned with bushy hair, and a standard iconograph of Marx, Engels and Lenin.

The legend under it, in Russian, said: "Glory to the Great Innovators of Scientific Communism."

"It was a gift, we aren't very proud of it," explained Claudio Fracassi, an official of the group who had worked as correspondent in Moscow for the party's popular paper, Passo Sera.

Section Is Key Unit

The section, next above the basic cell in Communist organization, is the heart of party life in Italy, members explained. The Montevardo group has 500 members, half of them people who work in the three big hospitals nearby and the others residents of the neighborhood. In most Communist parties, the cell is the key organizational unit, but in Italy it tends to be the larger section.

"It's like the Englishmen's club," said Mr. Fracassi, a tall and slick young man with a dashing Rudolph Valentino mustache. "We drop in every night to see our friends, although the executive committee meets once a week, and the section about once a month."

It is hard to imagine any other Communist Party that would admit outsiders, let alone a pair of American reporters, to a regular membership meeting. The secretary did make an announcement when the visitors arrived, and heads turned to stare, but then the meeting went on, apparently as usual.

First, the secretary spoke about the successful elections and the tremendous amount of work members had done knocking on doors, button-holing voters, spreading the line.

After a rather matter-of-fact report on the results by Secretary Capini, members got up one by one to deliver their views. Some 20 out of the 60 or 70 people present sought the floor, but though it was called a discussion, each made a speech with little or no comment or interruption from the attentive audience.

A "Democratic Party" "That's the way it is," said Annibale Paloscia after the three-and-a-half-hour meeting ended. "Open, lively debate, anybody can say whatever they want. Ours is a very democratic party."

Several speakers praised the party and appealed for even harder work in the "many battles ahead." A slim young woman in an embroidered white blouse, who turned out to be Mr. Fracassi's wife, analyzed the Italian press analysis of the campaign and said the reason the Christian Democrats had held on to their support and had come out ahead of the Communists was that they had used "a strategy of tension." It was going to take a "convergence of all progressive forces" to overcome the opposition, she said.

That is the basic party line, and nobody disagreed, although there were variations in the importance given to the fight against the enemy or to the effort to woo away their voters.

"Anti-Communist Myth" One impassioned man, pale and bespectacled, said the Christian Democrats had come in first because they had relied "on the anti-Communist myth."

"The people aren't really anti-Communist politically," he said. "It was just that they were scared by threats that they would lose their houses or their farms."

"That's called McCarthyism," she called an angry lady in the back of the room. "It's the strategy of fear, fear that brings putrefaction. Ugh."

When it was the turn of a fat woman in a blue silk dress, there was a whiff of self-criticism. The party hadn't done enough to encourage pensioners, she said. They were in bad trouble and they would have voted Communist in much greater numbers if they had been promised that pensions would be increased at the same rate as wages.

"Not realistic," snuffed a man in the back of the room.

in a low voice. But nobody argued.

Nobody argued with the people who said the party had to remember that not all Christian Democratic voters were racketeers, profiteers, exploiters, and that some of them were perfectly decent people who had their own point of view, which must be taken into account. And nobody argued with the people who said that only the Communists could solve the country's ills, bring it peace, justice, democracy.

The speeches went on and on, not really answering each other, rather offering testimonials to the cause and the manner of its work.

In the sense that a group of partisans were gloating over successes and licking wounds of lost hopes for victory, they might have been the wardhealers of any party machine conducting an election postmortem. But in the sense that they were true believers, self-conscious evangelists of a faith they put beyond dispute or possible question, they were clearly Communists, a very particular species of political animal even if the Italian breed is not quite like any other.

The meeting broke up quietly at 10:30 P.M. The hospital workers had to get up very early. But seven or eight of the members went on to the local trattoria and invited the Americans to supper with them.

Everyday Gossip Over the crucchiata and scamorza—fried garlic bread and grilled cheese—they reverted to the almost everyday people they were and gossiped about personal matters, jobs, movies, jokes.

A doctor, a senior radiologist at the hospital, told with hearty laughter of the "beautiful, delicious young blonde" he had just driven home who "couldn't talk about anything but Claudio Fracassi."

"She just went on and on," he said. "She said it was the second time she had come just to watch and hear him."

Claudio, obviously both flattered and embarrassed, pleaded with him: "Tell the truth, now. Is it really true? Who is she? Which one was it? You've got to tell the truth." He blushed a little.

The doctor kept repeating the story with huge enjoyment. Claudio's wife, not a bit amused, asked briskly, "Yes, who is she?" The doctor

SOVIET LEADER ARRIVES IN EAST BERLIN: Leonid I. Brezhnev being welcomed at the Schoenefeld Airport by Erich Honecker, East Germany's party chief. only laughed the more and said:

"Oh, the hypocrisy of man. She said she talked with you for an hour the other day, Claudio. How can you ask who she is? She's very pretty. And, of course, like the good Communist I am, I could only encourage her if she's drawn to the party by one of ours."

Later, the talk turned back to party affairs and the coming European Communist conference in East Berlin.

"Of course, it isn't very important," said Claudio. "How can you be interested in that? What's interesting is the line of the Italian Communist Party."

It seemed a surprising comment, especially from a Communist who was also a journalist and who had lived five years in Moscow.

Annibale explained afterward. "Claudio always says he's expressing his own opinion, but really he is always giving the exact party view. The party hasn't made much of the conference. It hasn't been discussed in our papers."

After all, some people might wonder why Berlinguer is going to see Brezhnev when we have made such a point of our independence from Moscow. And on the other hand, it might upset the Russians if we said too publicly that we don't think it means anything much to meet with them. Naturally, the comment must be careful.

It was definitely all Italian style, including the willingness to admit outsiders, but it was also definitely and recognizably Communist.

Witnesses Tell What They Saw When Riots Came to Soweto

By ELI T. KAUFMAN
The New York Times Staff Writer

SOBURG, June 27—Witnesses who saw the rioting in Soweto on June 27 and 28, and the schoolchildren in township of Soweto one of the worst in South African

...said the police had exercised the "greatest measure of self-control" and had fired only when their lives were endangered. He also said that the police had fired only after blacks had hacked black and white government employees to death. However, it was not until nearly 11 P.M., three hours after witnesses reported the first police fire at the students, that the body of a black policeman was found in his car. On Friday, Mr. Kruger, at a news conference for the foreign press, said the march had caught the police by surprise. Three-man patrols were dispatched to learn what was happening, he said, and 30 black policemen, only some of whom were armed, were sent with a white officer to head off the largest group of marchers. The police tried to talk with the leaders at the head of the march, Mr. Kruger asserted, and tear gas was used, but because of the openness of the terrain it proved ineffective. The leader of the marchers, whom Mr. Kruger identified as not being a student, "took up a very threatening attitude and he was shot."

...focus of the judiciary inquiry ordered a day after the riots flared. However, witnesses, all of whom were concentrated near the area where young Peterson died and all of whom profess varying degrees of sympathy for the marchers, insist that the attacks on Government property and Government workers followed rather than preceded the initial police shooting. The witnesses say that as news of the boy's death spread, the students broke into groups and began attacks on schools, offices and cars believed to belong to whites. One man told of seeing Indian doctors from a neighborhood clinic running for safety pursued by a mob. It was in this outburst of rage that two white social workers were killed. One of them was a sociologist named Melville Edelstein whose doctoral dissertation had warned of the latent rage of educated urban blacks toward Afrikaners.

...train service stopped and heavily manned checkpoints were set up on the few roads leading to the community. The witnesses generally agreed that the students lost control of the situation late in the day to older people and to the tsotsis, as members of gangs of young hoodlums are known in Zulu slang. The state-run liquor stores became the targets, and the witnesses said many people could be seen running through the streets with beer and whiskey. Many were reportedly drunk. Late on June 17 the police and health authorities stopped reporting the fatality toll. At that time the number of officially reported dead stood at 41, including the two whites.

By the 18th the riots began spreading to other townships, and Prime Minister John Vorster, then preparing to leave for his meeting with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in Germany, announced that the Government had given instructions to the police "to maintain law and order at all costs."

The New York Times/June 28, 1976

According to witnesses, the statement was followed by greater shows of force by the police, particularly in Alexandra Township, the only black area that is close to white residential neighborhoods. As the Soweto disorders were lessening, violence flared in townships northward to Pretoria. But it did not rage as long as in Soweto. The official death toll, which Thursday was reported as 140, was raised to 176 on Friday by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Kruger said the number included two whites and 12 children. He said 1,139 people had been wounded and 1,288 arrested.

U.N. Figures Denied He emphatically denied assertions he said were made in New York by the United Nations Committee on Apartheid that more than a thousand blacks were killed. Some in Soweto feel that the officially reported toll here is somewhat low, though they say that the United Nations figure is much too high. One man said he believed he saw 80 bodies in Soweto, 20 of them in a single place, near the Moroka stores, where they had apparently been shot as looters. Three days ago the black morgue here reported holding the unclaimed bodies of 93 riot victims. This was a day after a black undertaker reported he had removed eight bodies and other undertakers had claimed that those who died of stab wounds were still awaiting autopsies.

Crime Rate in Soweto Among World's Highest

Special to The New York Times
JOHANNESBURG, June 27—The crime rate in Soweto, for which gangs of young thugs called tsotsis are in large part to blame, is among the highest in the world; last year 845 murders were reported there. A white doctor who has worked in Soweto's large black hospital says that during the weekend the injury wards were the busiest he had seen anywhere and, he noted, he has worked at Bellevue in New York. Many of the wounded, he said, are victims of the tsotsis, who he added, often use sharpened bicycle spokes as weapons, sometimes paralyzing their victims by stabbing them in the spinal cord. The white owner of a chemical laboratory said that his black employees had asked that their weekly pay be given them in daily installments to lessen the chance of losing it all to the young muggers.

Bank Was Burned

During the early hours a Barclays Bank branch was burned and the offices of the agency administering black affairs were ransacked and gutted. A man told of seeing youths demanding to buy kerosene at a gasoline station; when the owner refused they reportedly beat him and set the station on fire. Some witnesses said they had heard that stores and schools had been targeted for attack. Schools where teachers and principals had endorsed the language protest were not burned. One of the first stores to be burned, one witness related, was the Verwoerd Shop, named after the assassinated Prime Minister. The store was owned by a black man, but most of the others belonged to Indians, Chinese and colored people of mixed ethnic stock. In the last few years the Government has allowed only blacks to open businesses in their townships, but some nonblacks who have been there for many years were allowed to stay. Many of these shops are in an area called White City, which was particularly hard hit by looters. As the rioting continued into the night of the 16th, 5,000 policemen and police reservists were in and around Soweto, which lies 18 miles west of Johannesburg. They were armed with shotguns and submachine guns but not gas masks or helmets. Witnesses said that by noon soldiers rode through the township on open trucks firing at youths, who scattered. By early afternoon telephone communication was cut off.

Plane With 257 Hijacked from Athens

The passengers was in flight from Damascus, Syria, said telephone calls to the Syrian news agency indicated that the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine was claiming responsibility for the hijacking.

Ben-Gurion Airport, outside Tel Aviv, was placed on alert because of concern that the hijackers might order the plane to fly there, then try to negotiate ransom demands for the lives of the Israelis aboard.

In Israel, Transport Minister Gad Yaacobi evaded a question as to whether Israel would negotiate with the hijackers, saying, "That's a hypothetical question." At present "this is a non-Israeli incident," he said.

Mr. Yaacobi declined to specify what actions the government had in mind, but a special team of ministers followed developments in the hijacking during the afternoon and evening.

First word of the hijacking reached the Government early this afternoon during its weekly Cabinet session in Jerusalem. The Minister's concern deepened when the aircraft was diverted to Libya, the most militant and vociferously anti-Israeli of the Arab states.

Israeli officials stressed that Air France and the French Government had full responsibility for the safety of the passengers. They added that given the stringent security precautions at Israel's Ben-Gurion Airport, it was most unlikely that the hijackers had boarded the aircraft here.

Radio Israel reported that airport monitors in Athens had overheard the pilot asking ground control in Libya to prepare to refuel the plane, indicating that the hijackers would want to take off again.

TEL AVIV, June 27—Transportation Minister Gad Yaacobi warned today that Israel would take all necessary action "both politically and in other spheres" to protect the Israelis aboard a hijacked Air France plane flying from Tel Aviv to Paris via Athens.

Mr. Yaacobi declined to specify what actions the government had in mind, but a special team of ministers followed developments in the hijacking during the afternoon and evening.

The Israeli nationals were aboard the regularly scheduled flight when it lifted off from Ben Gurion Airport shortly after 9 A.M. local time. A few of them were believed to have disembarked in Athens, but most were bound for Paris.

The identity of the Israeli passengers was withheld, but Air France officials got in touch with the families of those aboard once word of the hijacking was received.

Ben Gurion Airport, as a standard precaution, once word was received that the flight had been hijacked in the air. In the midst of the alert, security officials cleared hundreds of passengers from the main terminal when a suspicious suitcase was left unclaimed in the baggage area. The suitcase proved harmless, however, and was claimed shortly thereafter by an arriving passenger who had forgotten it.

PARIS, June 27—An Air France spokesman said the plane now sitting at Benghazi Airport in Libya was its first carrier ever hijacked. The plane, which can carry as many as 330 passengers, had 248 persons aboard, including a baby, on the flight from Athens to Paris, the spokesman said.

French Government sources said the French Ambassador in Tripoli, Jean-Pierre Cabouat, has been in contact with Libyan authorities, who according to the sources, had boarded the plane and were negotiating with the six hijackers.

Mr. Yaacobi evaded a question as to whether Israel would negotiate with the hijackers, saying, "That's a hypothetical question." At present "this is a non-Israeli incident," he said.

Algerians Vote on a Charter For 'Islamic Socialist' State

ALGIERS, June 27 (Reuters)—Algerians voted today in a referendum on a new national charter, a vote expected to amount to an expression of national support for President Houari Boumediene and his Government.

The 60,000-word draft charter, which incorporates more than a thousand changes following a nationwide public debate, will form the basis for a new Constitution embracing "Islamic Socialism" if it is approved by the voters.

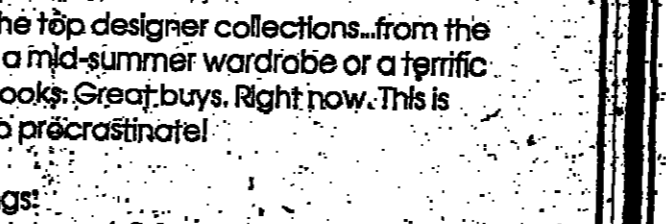

The referendum is the first since Algerians voted to accept independence from France in 1962. Early reports indicate a high turnout. The final result is expected Tuesday night. If accepted, the draft charter will make Islam the state religion, specify the rights of women and the press and lay down principles and programs for running the country along Socialist lines for the next decade.

Nigerians Fear New Revelations in Cement Scandal

ECONOMIC DRIVE SOUGHT BY FORD

November. The Rambouillet meeting, Mr. Ford declared, helped create "a political will and spirit of cooperation which have not only helped us resolve" recent problems, "but which have in fact strengthened considerably relations among our nations and among the industrialized democracies as a whole."

Although the United States called this meeting, even members of the American delegation conceded that it would not produce any earth-shaking or even particularly specific results.

The loosely constructed agenda for the first session calls for a discussion of the world economic recovery and expansion, including recent economic developments, and the problem of inflation, as well as monetary and financial issues.

Tomorrow, the conference will take up trade, international investment, relationships between the rich industrial nations and the poor developing nations—a discussion that will be led by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany—and energy problems.

One subject scheduled for discussion is a multilateral economic program to aid Italy.

LAGOS, Nigeria, June 27—The ships laden with cement that have paralyzed Nigeria's ports for the last 18 months are gradually being unloaded and sent on their way, but the scandal that brought them here may not yet have run its course.

Eight days ago, a two-story dormitory building, nearing completion at the University of Ife, in the western state of Oyo, collapsed, killing one workman and injuring 18.

The collapse occurred, it is said, after students in the engineering department had warned that inferior cement was being used in the construction.

The charge raises a possibility that millions of tons of cement, mined in the hills of waiting freighters, has found its way to small contractors.

"Estimates say that as much as half of the cement went bad," said one official who has been following the scandal closely. "Nobody knows where it went. It certainly wasn't thrown out. It's being mixed in with good cement to stretch it out."

"In two or three years, we may be seeing buildings collapsing all over Nigeria," the official added.

The cement scandal was a major reason for the coup that overthrew the regime of former Gen. Yakubu Gowon last July. Under General Gowon, Government officials ordered 20 million tons of cement—16 million tons by the Ministry of Defense alone—to be delivered within 12 months.

Twice the Port Capacity
At a rate of 1.6 million tons a month, the shipments were more than twice the unloading capacity of all of Nigeria's ports combined.

The massive orders led to an armada of ships anchored off the Lagos coastline. In September, there were over 420 freighters, stretching as far as the eye could see. Many were decrepit hulks manned by skeleton crews dispatched by ship owners to collect demurrage costs—$4,100 a day per ship.

Some of these ships waited for eight months to a year. In the moisture-ridden hulls, the cement they were carrying lost its binding quality after six months and became worthless for construction.

In some instances, the bags burst during unloading, spewing cement onto the ground. At one depot at Kikiki, along the Badagry Creek, the cement was simply rebagged and sold at reduced prices.

The new Government appointed a tribunal to investigate the scandal. But it seems to have made little progress in untangling a web of kickbacks and bribes involving Government officials, foreign shipowners, corrupt purchasing agents, unscrupulous middlemen, phony corporations, dubious letters of credit and Swiss bank accounts.

In a report issued recently, in which it complained that the public had not cooperated in giving information, the tribunal raised accusations against nine public officials.

Among them was a secretary in the Defense Ministry, who said he was merely following orders from General Gowon, a former deputy whom the tribunal suggested was out to sabotage the country, a former ambassador to the Netherlands and several officials from the Central Bank. They have been dismissed and their assets are being investigated.

The names of prominent Nigerian businessmen rumored to have been involved in the cement affair did not figure in the tribunal's report. The question of exactly how so much cement was ordered did not seem to be answerable.

The tribunal cleared the head of state, Lieut. Gen. Olusegun

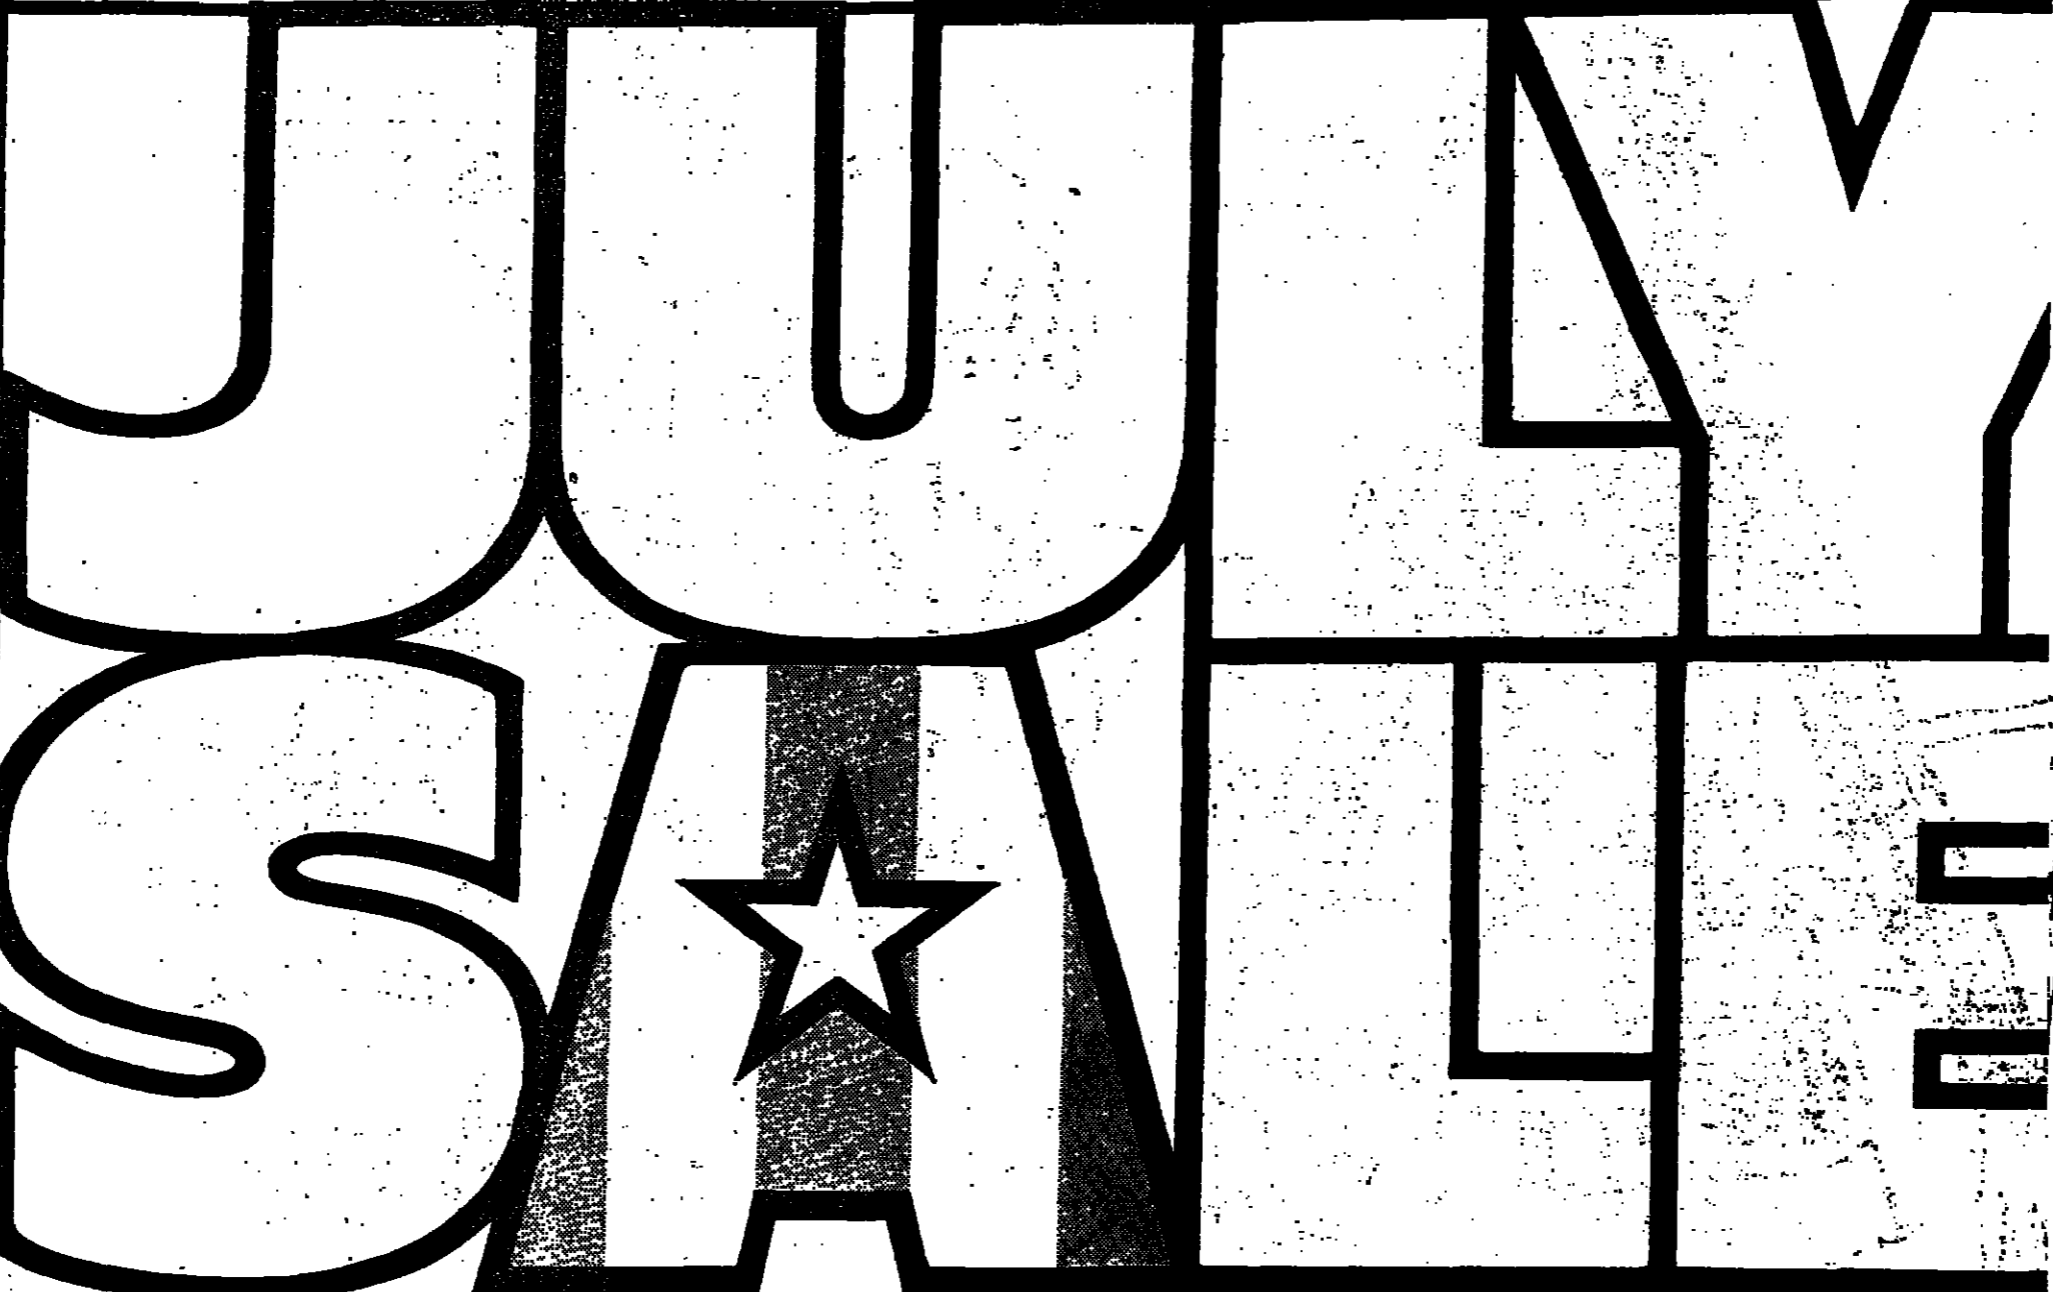

Obasanjo, whose name was mentioned twice in its proceedings. It pointed out that the first cement contract was signed more than two months after he had left his position as inspector of engineers in the army.

The investigator said that if a proper price had been negotiated, $53 a ton instead of the $60 that was paid, the Government would have saved $57 million. It did not add on the demurrage costs, which have been estimated at $240 million.

These sources, there appears to be a kind of consensus among the participating countries, except for the United States, that there was no great need for this meeting because the heads of nations have been seeing each other frequently on a bilateral basis.

This summit conference continues discussions begun at a similar meeting at the Chateau de Rambouillet in France last

A Party Office Was Attacked by Poles

RANDOM, Poland, June 27 (UPI)—Demonstrators set fire to Communist Party headquarters here and looted food and liquor stores during strikes Friday protesting Government food price increases. It was learned here today.

Residents of Radom, a leather tanning center 60 miles south of Warsaw, said several people were injured when police used tear gas to disperse the demonstrators.

There were no reports of fatalities or use of firearms. Fire destroyed much of the interior of the modern three-story party headquarters building and most of the windows were shattered.

Flames scorched the exterior of the building and on the street outside there was a large patch of blackened pavement where residents said the demonstrators had turned several cars.

Throughout the city center, food and liquor stores had broken windows and empty shelves.

Police Patrol Streets
Police officers wearing helmets patrolled the streets around the party headquarters. They carried riot sticks and tear gas but no firearms. A convoy of police vehicles, including an armored car with water cannons mounted on its roof, passed by the front of the building.

Prime Minister Piotr Jaroszewicz appeared briefly on television during the height of the demonstrations to say that the food price increases he had announced 24 hours earlier would be delayed pending consultations with the workers.

In December 1970, scores of people were killed and Communist Party leader Wladyslaw Gomulka fell from power as a result of strikes over food price increases in the port cities of Gdansk and Szczecin.

Residents said workers in the city in leather and fertilizer factories left their jobs Friday morning after the food price increases, ranging from 30 to 60 percent, were announced. Food prices had been frozen since the 1970 riots.

At first, residents said, the workers simply paraded around the streets in a peaceful demonstration.

Big Communist Party Rallies
WARSAW, June 27 (Reuters)—Poland's Communist Party, recovering from the shock of demonstrations by workers that forced the withdrawal of proposed food-price increases, staged big rallies throughout the nation today backing party leader Edward Gierek.

Mr. Gierek, who came to power in 1970 after similar worker riots against food-price increases, is due to head his party's delegation to the East Berlin conference of European Communist Parties opening on Tuesday.

In Poland, today, speakers backed the Government and Prime Minister Piotr Jaroszewicz, chief architect of the new pricing structure, which would have raised food prices an average of 60 percent.

One of the biggest rallies—of 35,000 workers, farmers and youths at Olsztyn, north of Warsaw—condemned what were labeled irresponsible and adventurist elements for touching off the worker violence in Warsaw and Radom last Friday.

Speculation Stilled
Public support today for both Mr. Gierek and Mr. Jaroszewicz stilled some speculation that a high-level reshuffle might be made.

Mr. Jaroszewicz said the price rises were an unavoidable necessity. Official comment here insists that some increases are necessary to satisfy wage demands and investment needs, especially in farming.

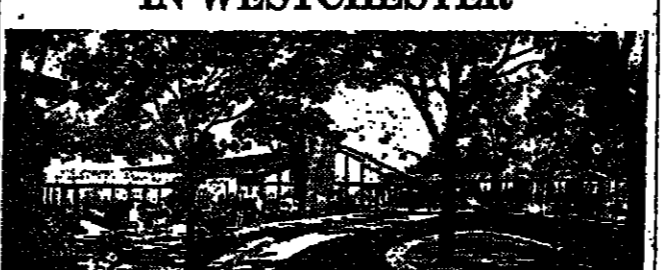

Today's rally speakers urged a back-to-work spirit to make good on losses caused by industrial stoppages on Friday, when workers debated the Jaroszewicz package.

Latest reports suggest that temporary stoppages were widespread as workers called for better compensation, bonuses and cuts in meat prices.

Polish authorities still have to determine whether Friday's worker violence near Warsaw and at Radom can go unpunished.

Designed anew with threads into the Ming dynasty. Sloane's will be the first to introduce Tyndale's "Ming Collection" in fine drip-glaze ceramics. All of serene lotus-white and celestial blues. The ceramics are reproductions typical of the Ming dynasty, circa 1368-1644. All lamps have teak-wood finish bases and exquisitely shaped shades of pleated white fabric. Motifs include the round whorl designs that have beautified Chinese art for 2000 years. It's complementary perfection with our very complete oriental decors—as Sloane's continues to create complete environments for you. However, you'll find these lamps and accessories equally marvelous in almost any setting. Be among the first to preview this fashion display.

Baudouin's Steady Reign Bolsters Belgian Throne

By PAUL KEMEZIS

BRUSSELS, June 27—In recent years Baudouin has skillfully brought the thinking of the royal house, previously a bastion of the old centralist state system, into line with this trend. In an historic address to Parliament in March, he said regionalization was "part of a necessary modernization that met the needs of the country."

Setting what will probably be the keynote for the rest of his reign, he added that "to federate is to unite in agreement to differ and not to separate and confront."

The King's scrupulously neutral role between the language groups also has practical political benefits. Belgian politicians point out with relief that he allows them to avoid a fight over electing a Walloon or Flemish president. "He saves us one crisis we don't need," said one political observer.

Quiet Public Image
Because of the nuances of his position, which is different from the straightforward symbol of national honor that most European monarchs represent, Baudouin has been forced to dampen his public personality.

"The King has no very enthusiastic following," says one Belgian political observer. "but this is good because it means he will never have passionate opposition."

In daily life this means he must carefully balance his actions between all factions, speak Dutch and French with equal ease, and remain a bit separate from and above his subjects.

"Baudouin could never be seen out in the country riding a bicycle like Juliana does in Holland," one court official said. "It just wouldn't fit here."

In line with this policy, the King never expresses private opinions in public and does not grant press interviews.

Painful Restraint
The imposed public restraint can be painful. The King, visiting a flood-ravaged area near Antwerp in March, was assailed by a crowd of people loudly complaining that Government negligence in repairing dikes had caused the flooding.

For Baudouin personally, this low-key public image was a blessing in the early years of his reign. At that time he was still a melancholy young man developing a personality in the shadow of his emigrant father, who continued living at the Royal Palace on the outskirts of Brussels for years after he resigned.

Successful trips to the United States and the Belgian Congo, now Zaire, in 1959, plus the marriage to the more extroverted Fabiola, seemed to mark King Baudouin's arrival to adulthood and self-confidence. "He matured slowly," said one former ambassador to Belgium, "but he became a fine, intelligent man."

Less Stuff
While Baudouin is considered warm and personable in private, he still has a lonely side. The fact that the royal couple has produced no offspring has reinforced this tendency. The King has developed a close relationship with Phillip, son of his younger brother, Prince Albert. Although Albert is technically next in line of succession, the 15-year-old boy will probably become the next King if Baudouin lives out his natural life.

Aware of the limits of his role, Baudouin has nevertheless sought recently to remove some of the stuffiness of his public image and establish more contact with the public outside of his official visits and talks.

The role of the old-line Belgian nobility has been reduced. For example, Herman Liebaers, the present Grand Marshal, who is in charge of the King's public life, is a Socialist and son of a union activist, and has wide contacts in intellectual circles.

But some touches, such as a television film about the daily life of the King, were ruled out. "That just didn't fit him," said one Belgian official involved in the planning.

Autonomy Is Welcomed
The great majority of Belgians welcome this increase of regional autonomy and the moves toward a Federal system, but they do not want a total separation of the two parts into independent states. For them, the royal house, one of the last really "Belgian institutions," is a guarantee of continued union.

Crown Prince Baudouin taking the oath of office in Brussels in 1951.

Army Chief Leads in Portuguese Vote for President

a former military security chief and a populist, who waged an emotional campaign for "people's power," apparently was taking votes away from both the Communists and the Socialists.

Prime Minister Pinheiro de Azevedo suffered a heart attack last Wednesday, but remained in the race, and it had been expected that he would get some sympathy votes.

The new President of the republic, who is to take office eight days after the final results are announced, will name the Prime Minister and his government, on the basis of the legislative elections.

General Ramalho Eanes and the other candidates have indicated that they would name as Prime Minister Mr. Soares, the Socialist leader, whose party won a plurality of 35 percent in the last election. Mr. Soares has declared he is ready to form a minority government, rejecting any alliance with either the Communists or the parties to the right.

More than 6.5 million Portuguese aged 18 and over were eligible to vote in mainland Portugal, the Azores and Madeira and the territory of Macao on the South China coast.

First Results From Macao
The first election results were received from Macao, where General Ramalho Eanes won 80 percent of the 1,715 votes cast. Prime Minister Pinheiro de Azevedo was second, followed by Major Saralva de Carvalho and Mr. Pato.

Contrary to what had been generally predicted, the people went to polling places calmly and in large numbers. There had been concern among camaign organizers because turnout at rallies were relatively low. The national radio and television systems urged members of the public to vote as "a right and a duty."

In most of Portugal it was a stifling hot day, with temperatures in the 90's, when most people would head for the beach. But many people sacrificed some of their beach time to stand in line to vote. "Of course I voted and everybody has to vote," a man who rents beach chairs at the fashionable resort of Estoril asserted indignantly. Only a few people at Estoril's popular Tamariz Beach said they would not go to the polls.

Shop Clerk Is Pessimistic
José Manuel Nunes, a 28-year-old shop clerk who was drinking coffee on the esplanade, said he would not vote because he had lost hope in the revolutionary groups that overthrew Portugal's right-wing dictatorship in April 1974. "Life has gotten worse for everybody in these two years, except for the sharks who've gotten rich," Mr. Nunes said, laughing at official calls for austerity.

Maria Teresa Brandão, a 19-year-old student wearing a green bikini, said she would not vote because she did not like any of the candidates. The armed forces were put on strict alert last night for the elections and a special operations center was set up in Lisbon's army staff headquarters. However, there was little need for special precautions; the voting was orderly, according to radio reports from around the country.

The election of a President completes the process of administrative establishing the new democratic state that grew out of the military-led revolution of 1974.

Gen. Francisco de Costa Gomes, the present chief of state, who was appointed by the governing military Council of the Revolution, has agreed to turn over his powers to the new President.

Under the new Constitution, the Council of the Revolution will henceforth serve as an advisory body to the President and as a guarantor of the nation's constitutional institutions. The Constitution, which became effective on April 25, the second anniversary of the revolution, sets up a semipresidential system, with political power shared by the President and the National Assembly.

ivities around the country, drew over 200,000 persons to the former world's fair grounds in Brussels despite searing 90-degree heat. The crowd watched athletic events and folk dances, heard jazz and symphony music and saluted the King and the Spanish-born Queen, Fabiola.

Naturally shy, Baudouin has never developed a charismatic appeal in Belgium, but he has won popularity for the seriousness and dependability with which he carries out his duties. Because of the country's language division, these are more complicated and important than those of most other European heads of state, royal or otherwise.

A Good Listener
The King has real political power only during a governmental crisis, when acting on his own authority he names the new prime minister. A good listener with excellent lines to all parties and a talented set of advisers, Baudouin has performed this duty well, avoiding the sort of bitter battles with politicians that contributed to his father's downfall.

Leopold, a stiff, self-confident man, refused advice from his Government to go into exile during the hectic day of May 19, 1935. He spent the war in Belgium and later in Germany as a prisoner and was forced from office by the Socialists five years later on charges of collaboration.

On a day-to-day basis, the Belgian King performs the difficult function of a bridge between the country's French-speaking Walloon and Dutch-speaking Flemish communities.

During Baudouin's 25-year reign, Flanders has grown rich and strong, winning political and cultural equality with once dominant Wallonia. This has driven the two communities further apart as political parties, trade unions and even Government ministries have split along regional lines.

The great majority of Belgians welcome this increase of regional autonomy and the moves toward a Federal system, but they do not want a total separation of the two parts into independent states. For them, the royal house, one of the last really "Belgian institutions," is a guarantee of continued union.

11 Passengers Killed, 29 Hurt As Express Derails in Belgium

BRUSSELS, June 27 (AP)—Six cars of an express train carrying Dutch and British vacationers from Amsterdam to Paris derailed in Belgium today killing 11 passengers and injuring 29, railway officials said. Most of the casualties were believed to be Dutch.

The New York Times/June 28, 1976 Cross symbol indicates site of train crash.

The derailment occurred as the 12-car train neared the station at Neufvilles, between Jurbiise and Soignies, about halfway between Brussels and the French border. The train, which originated in Amsterdam, had stopped in Brussels about a half hour earlier.

Rescuers cut through the mangled cars to pull out the victims. The injured were taken to nearby hospitals and the dead were placed in a chapel at a girl's school in Neufvilles. Uninjured passengers were taken by bus to Paris.

Railwaymen narrowly averted a second tragedy by stopping the Paris-to-Brussels Trans-European Express heading in the opposite direction in the same area. All traffic on the international line was diverted.

There was no immediate explanation for the cause of the derailment, although an initial investigation ruled out human error. Officials believed that the unusually intense heat—over 90 degrees—may have caused a switch to malfunction. The switch had been checked one hour before the derailment and was found in working order, they said.

Argentine Fighting Both Leftist Subversion and Counterterrorism by Right

By JUAN de ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, June 27—Terrorism by left-wing extremists in Argentina has provoked counterterrorism by security forces that the military Government here is trying to bring under control.

Argentina has become very dangerous for anyone suspected of having connections with the subversive guerrilla organizations that are active here.

At least three military intelligence services, the federal police and some armed right-wing "paramilitary" groups have been trying to penetrate and destroy the revolutionary guerrilla forces.

Some actions by these counter groups have taken the Government, led by Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, by surprise, such as the kidnapping on June 11 of 25 Chilean and Uruguayan refugees from shelters where they lived under United Nations auspices.

Gen. Albano Harguindeguy, the Minister of Interior, did not learn about the kidnapping until eight hours after the refugees had been seized by armed men from hotels a block away from a police station.

The Government had announced that there were among the 20,000 refugees from Chile, Brazil, Uruguay and Bolivia who have come here in recent years, persons whose continued presence in Argentina was "not compatible with our internal security."

Conflict With the U.N.

But the kidnapping caused a conflict with the United Nations and an international uproar that the Government viewed with concern at a time when the Minister of Economy, José Martínez de Hoz, was negotiating in the United States for financial help.

Under heavy pressure from General Videla, the kidnapped refugees were located by navy intelligence officials and were freed. Some had been tortured, according to United Nations officials.

This incident, coming after the assassination here of Juan José Torres González, a former President of Bolivia, and of two former members of the Uruguayan Congress, Zelmario Michelini and Hector Gutiérrez Ruiz, by unidentified persons, led the Government to try to exercise more central control over the antisubversive campaign.

Gen. Arturo A. Corbett, the new federal police chief, named after the assassination by a terrorist bomb of Gen. Casarop Cardozo last week, said in a televised speech Friday night that the subversion required "a high concentration of centralized violence" by the state in reply.

But he added that this repressive violence must be "official, public and controlled, exercised with decision, but also with the prudence of men who know their duties."

This is the position of General Videla and a majority of the leaders of the armed forces in the context of the strong emotions aroused among the military by guerrilla forces against retired officers, isolated policemen and the regulars of serving officers in the face of "controlled violence" is considered moderate here.

To back up the Government's position, the military junta decreed changes in the penal code that restore the death penalty for anyone convicted of causing the death of any member of the armed forces, the judiciary or a public official in the line of duty. The death sentence, which used to be carried out within 48 hours of conviction by a military court.

If this system reinforced the military Government will have legal capital punishment as a method of "controlled violence" against the present methods of the right-wing extremists who have been killing hundreds of persons considered subversive. Capital punishment was abolished here in 1972.

The midnight arrest and disappearance of people suspected of guerrilla connections, or with political records linked to the military Government, has not yet published a comprehensive list of people arrested since March 24, when the Government of President Isabel Martínez de Perón was overthrown, but thousands have been detained, and in many cases relatives have been unable to get any information.

Many Habeas Corpus Actions

The federal courts in Buenos Aires have received more than 800 habeas corpus petitions since April 1. Many are for persons who have been arrested by security forces and whose whereabouts are not known.

Carmen Beatriz Frascotto de Roman, a psychologist whose husband was arrested May 7, by a group of young men in civilian clothes with federal identification, has filed petitions in different courts and obtained an interview with Gen. Carlos Suárez, commander of the Army Corps here.

None of these official releases could provide any information about her husband, who in 1972 was a union leader at an automobile factory where there were serious political conflicts between right-wing Peronists and leftists. These eventually led Roman to quit his job and to work in a bank.

At the neighborhood station, Mrs. Roman said she refused to go to a house to take fingerprints by the abductors, who whisked her while they talked away.

The men who made our country...

Peter Augustus Jay, as a young man, saw American history in the making. Son of the famous statesman John Jay, he accompanied his father to London in 1794. As pictured here, he acted as his father's secretary during treaty negotiations with Great Britain. The resulting "Jay Treaty" was a triumph of diplomacy, adjusting several major points of dispute still outstanding between the two countries.

Small-Town Black Mayors Find Early Going Is Rough

By ERNEST HOESENDOERF
Special to The New York Times

TOUGALOO, Miss., June 24—Willard Whitaker became the first black Mayor of Madison, Ark., three years ago in a hall of bullets in a shootout with the Klan Klan and a victory at the polls.

By some miracle he has made peace with the White supremacist Klan and counts one member among his friends. "I'm no politician," he says with a broad grin, "never touch the stuff. I'm just lucky."

Mr. Whitaker has not won everything, however. The struggle with the Federal bureaucracy that oversees the complicated support system for rural areas and small towns has stopped him at nearly every turn, and he now feels "like the children of Israel between the Red Sea and Pharaoh's army."

Mr. Whitaker is not alone. A host of black mayors who won office in small Southern towns in the last few years have had rough going. To help one another solve their problems, the mayors and staffs of 10 such small towns met in a workshop with housing and community development specialists under the auspices of the Federal Housing Assistance Council.

Others Share Problems

The municipalities represented ranged from hamlets like Greener, N. C., which is 96 percent black and has a population of 420, to Tallulah, La., with 11,000 people, 75 percent of whom are black. Other towns were more balanced racially — such as Uniontown, Ala., whose population of 2,150 is 58 percent black.

A number of complaints appeared as a common thread among the problems of the communities. They included the following:

There was usually no system to deliver needed social services when black mayors replaced white mayors, mostly because the previous administrations did not choose to seek help for the poor and often because they were suspicious of Federal dollars with their requirements of nondiscrimination and other kinds of obligations.

Blacks, kept out of office and positions of responsibility so long in their communities, were untutored in the workings of the layer-upon-layer jurisdictions around them, such as the county, regional, state and Federal agencies and governments.

The outgoing, defeated white administrations lost political power, but invariably they retained the economic power in the community and often tried to use it to "get even." They control the land, so much needed for the expansion of housing as well as for job-producing industrial expansion, and are unwilling to part with it easily.

The black political victors were usually very poor, and because they did not know the levers for prying away the state and government aid, and often were reluctant to ask the aid from agencies they suspected of being racist, they were impeded in their thrust for improvement.

Bennie Thompson, Mayor of Bolton, Miss., says, "We have a lot to do, too little resources, and some constituents who can't wait. We need help, man."

The town officials groped for answers to political questions and technical problems. Mary Mathewson, Princesville, N.C.'s development director, wanted to know how to deal with a white landowner who insisted on setting up an unwanted trailer court and maintained he would sell his land only for $9,000 an acre.

"Well, first you get the town council to pass a zoning regulation against trailer courts where he has his land," said John Blanchfield of the Housing Assistance Council. He winked, and did not need to say that the price of the land would probably come down. Mary Mathewson nodded, knowing what to do.

Nobody quite knew what to tell Jessie Walker of Lake Providence, La., where the workshops for the mayors ran for 10 hours or more every day for three days in the library of Tougaloo College here. Speakers were from H.U.D. and the Farmers Home Administration, the two agencies relied upon mostly by small towns and rural areas for Federal help. They talked about sewers and water and fire engines, but mostly about housing.

Some of the news was discouraging. James K. Patterson, deputy assistant regional administrator of H.U.D.'s Atlanta office, told the mayors that they could expect little consideration for funds unless they had a comprehensive town plan. Then he added:

"Unless you have got your planning money for this year, you're too late. It's all gone, all $75 million has been committed. You can apply next year, maybe."

This was a Federal complication that led Mayor Whitaker of Madison, Ark., to respond: "Somebody's nuts, and I don't think it's me."

Pentagon Denies It Tried To Change Cuba's Weather

WASHINGTON, June 27 (AP)—The Defense Department today denied a charge that the United States tried to change the weather in 1968 and 1970 in order to damage Cuba's sugar crop.

"It's not true," a Pentagon spokesman said of the charge made yesterday by a former Defense Department consultant, Lowell Fume.

Mr. Fume formerly was an environmental researcher with the International Research and Technology Corporation of Washington.

He said that the Central Intelligence Agency and the Pentagon cooperated in a program to seed clouds near Cuba so that they would drop their rain before reaching the island, thus causing a drought.

Inner City Houses Are in Demand as the Cost of New Suburban Homes

New York real estate broker who now specializes in selling Victorian houses here. "Despite the housing needs of lower-income people, who complain that they are being forced out of the houses they can afford."

Nationally, the trend is still more a trickle than a tide. Municipal executives and housing experts concede that problems in city schools, crime and other factors about city life are continuing to discourage many people from living in big cities.

Several said they thought the quality of urban schools was a principal deterrent to a broadening of the trend.

But in some cities, they say, there is a measurable increase in the restoration of older houses by middle-income people, particularly by younger and older couples without school-age children, a move that is being accelerated by rapidly increasing prices for the old-fashioned American dream house in the suburbs.

Trend Spreads

The restoration of historically distinctive old houses has grown for a number of years in such cities as Boston, Washington, Philadelphia, Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C. Several thousand brownstones have been rehabilitated in New York City in recent years.

According to real estate brokers and civic officials interviewed in other parts of the country, this pattern has begun to gather steam elsewhere, as the following examples illustrate:

Population Loss Reversed

In Boston, officials credit the restoration of older homes with already reversing the city's long-term loss of population. Officials elsewhere are optimistic enough to predict the same pattern for their cities.

In San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury district, the counterurban stage of the 1960's, 80-year-old Victorian-style houses with three living units sold for $40,000 a few years ago but are now selling for $100,000 or more after rehabilitation.

Meanwhile, Lower-Quality 'Working Class' Victorian Houses, often near or in deteriorated ethnic communities, are in big demand by middle-income people, who can buy them for as little as $30,000 or so.

The demand for these older houses has just been fantastic," said Lewis Sarazy, a former year, perhaps three times the number five years ago.

Even in Detroit and Chicago, both older cities that have long been losing population, officials say there are growing, if still small, efforts by middle-income people to restore old houses.

Restorers Are Young

For the most part, specialists say the people restoring houses tend to be in the 25-to-35-year-old group, are college-educated, have professional or management jobs and want amenities of city life. Not all the families who restore houses remain in the city. Some eventually give in to urban pressures and leave, particularly after children reach upper-grade school age.

Radio Contact Is Lost With Atlantic Balloonist

Ground crews lost radio communication with trans-Atlantic balloonist Karl Thomas yesterday but said they did not believe there was any cause for alarm.

A spokesman for the New York control station monitoring Mr. Thomas's bid to make the first solo balloon flight across the Atlantic said there had been no contact with him since about 3 A.M., when he moved clear of a thunderstorm carrying 35-knot winds.

Mr. Thomas's high-frequency transmitter has been out of order since he took off at 9 P.M. Friday from the Lakehurst, N.J., naval air station. Since then, United Press International reported, he has had to relay messages by short-range radio by way of passing ships and airplanes.

"Suburbia combines the worst of both worlds—the worst of rural living and the worst of city living," said John Modzalewski, a 28-year-old engineer who bought an old house in the Dorchester section of Boston for $4,600 several years ago and has spent $5,000 to fix it up.

"To our way of thinking, this looks like a stronger trend than ever now because it is very difficult for a lot of people to pull it with a house in the suburbs," said Ralph Memelo, an official of the Boston Redevelopment Authority. The authority has sponsored perhaps the country's most successful urban rehabilitation projects, sections of Dorchester, Charlestown, Jamaica Plain, the Boston waterfront, Beacon Hill and the South End.

Nationally, no statistics are available on the extent to which older homes are being restored and used. Few cities have reliable, up-to-date figures. One possible indication of the trend is a doubling in the last year, to 12,000, in the circulation of "Old House Journal," a monthly published in New York that gives advice to people restoring old houses.

For people who decide to restore old houses, the experience can seem like a blend of life on the frontier and life in a sweatshop, a step back in time involving hard work and unforeseen expenses. But many boasts of finding not only a housing bargain but also satisfaction from doing the work as well as quality absent in modern houses.

"I frequently feel like I'm raising two children in a freezing slum with burglars at the back door and the building inspectors at the front door," joked Mrs. Martin McClain, one of several hundred people who have bought houses in Detroit after forsaking life in the suburbs.

Likes the Texture

But she said she liked her new life.

"The inner city is more varied and colorful in texture than the suburbs," she said. "The suburbs are quite homogeneous. Our children are getting a really good taste of reality here."

John Twichell, a San Francisco city employee, said: "When I'm done, I hope to have a seven room mansion I can walk to work from, with a craft room, a library, a marble fireplace and hardwood floors."

Mr. Twichell has spent $50,000 on his partly restored Victorian house, and will put $2,500 more into it. "Where could you do that anywhere else?" he asked.

In New York, brownstone restoration probably reached its peak five years ago, largely in Brooklyn. Fazel G. Jackson, a vice president of the Bowery Savings Bank, said there was a small upturn in applications for renovation mortgages last fall when the city accelerated auctioning of brownstones because of its fiscal crisis.

But he said renovations had not reached the peak of several years ago, mostly because the units that were cheapest and easiest to rehabilitate had already been acquired and restoration costs have risen steadily. However, he said, some bargains could still be found, in the Fort Greene Brooklyn, for example. Everett Orman, publishing director of an organization of serving older people, predicts that graphic trends—fewer or no child unmarried couples together—will a rehabilitation trend.

G.O.P. MAYORS BID FORD ACT ON JOBS

contrast to the arguments on other issues before the mayors. The divisions were between big and small cities, Republicans and Democrats, conservatives and liberals, and blacks and whites, as Mayor William S. Hart of East Orange, N.J., noted.

The debate between the factions was bitter over resolutions recommending a reordering of national priorities by cutting the defense budget, calling for full employment and supporting the Humphrey-Hawkins employment bill.

The public works resolution noted that the bill now before Mr. Ford had been scaled down from the $6.2 billion measure he vetoed in January and said, "Despite the improvement in national economic indicators, most of the nation's major urban centers continue to face spiraling inflation and high rates of local unemployment caused by the national recession."

The resolutions will be taken up by the full convention at its closing session on Thursday. Another proposed resolution urges the Presidential nominees of both major parties to select as their running mates a mayor or someone else presumably knowledgeable and sensitive to urban problems.

MARINE ABUSE CASES UP DESPITE REFORMS

WASHINGTON, June 27 (UPI)—Despite reforms in the United States Marines' basic training that were aimed at reducing maltreatment of recruits, the number of court-martials for serious maltreatment by drill instructors has tripled since the new rules went into effect last November.

Most of the cases involved hitting recruits with fists or objects, and some involved oral threats and taking of money from trainees. The figures were requested by Representative Les Aspin, Democrat of Wisconsin, going on into marine recruiting and training policies. The inquiry was prompted by publicized incidents of injuries and deaths from maltreatment.

Tourists in Plains, Ga., Learn Little

BY CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

PLAINS, Ga., June 27—There is a growing trickle of tourists flowing through this little south Georgia town of 883 people, the home of Jimmy Carter, who will surely be the next Democratic Presidential nominee.

Occasionally a few of them are lucky and get a look at the 31-year-old former Georgia Governor, as happened yesterday morning when he dropped by the gasoline station owned by his brother, Billy, to watch friends clean fish for a fish fry.

Others may see his 8-year-old daughter, Amy, selling lemonade on Woodland Drive or they may simply gaze at his modest ranch house on the street. But for the most part, they see little.

More favored observers, such as journalists, occasionally get a better glimpse of what is still a relatively unknown and somewhat enigmatic personality.

Eritrean Question

At the fish fry yesterday afternoon at his mother's "Pond House" retreat south of town, a television reporter cajoled his small daughter into asking Mr. Carter a question about Eritrea, the northernmost province of Ethiopia, which has been ravaged by a guerrilla insurgency conducted by Eritrean nationalists who want independence.

The child protested that she did not even know what Eritrea was. Fair enough, her father suggested, since Mr. Carter had conceded ignorance of the Eritrean problem on June 6 when answering questions from a Jewish audience in Elizabeth, N. J. But, as an afterthought, he had told his questioner then, "If you give me a couple of days I will have an answer."

When the little girl asked the question yesterday, Mr. Carter must have known his leg was being pulled. But he talked earnestly to her for several minutes, telling her that the Eritreans were a "Semitic" people who had long been in conflict with the Ethiopians and maltreated by them.

Things had been better for the Eritreans, he suggested, under the reign of the late Emperor Haile Selassie, but relations with the central government had again deteriorated.

Specialists in the history and politics of Africa might still have reservations about Mr. Carter's grasp on the problem. But, as Mr. Carter remarked later to reporters, he had not forgotten the lapse in New Jersey and had read a book about the subject and had questioned one of his foreign policy advisers about it.

He again demonstrated that he is an endlessly curious man, and perhaps a proud one who dislikes to show chinks in his intellectual armor.

This is not to say that the insights into Mr. Carter's character and habits are enough to satisfy everyone. And even these insights are easier to come by than the smallest peek into his immediate political plans, which now revolve around choosing a running mate.

On Friday Mr. Carter waded into a fish pond further south of Plains that his son, Chip, 26, had been ordered to drain because the balance of fish life in it was no longer considered healthy.

The draining had been only partly successful, the water was chest-deep and attempts to net the bass and bluegills in the pond had faltered.

Mr. Carter tried to entice journalists into the water, where a water snake had been seen, by saying he would discuss the Vice Presidency with those in the water but not with those on shore.

However, he was not serious. Even if willingness to face snakes and mud is not going to get much information, yet from Mr. Carter.

At the fish fry, he maintained his refusal to hint at his choice. He is known to be considering 14 men and women.

He said he had consulted 25 party leaders and national figures for their advice and planned to reach an additional 15 or so. He said he had got "remarkably compatible" suggestions from the people consulted. Most of them had mentioned names from a smaller group of about seven possibilities.

He said he would soon ask Charles Eirto, an Atlanta lawyer and longtime associate and adviser, to begin preliminary discussions with five to seven of the prospects.

Mr. Carter also told his guests he had asked to receive foreign policy briefings after the Democratic National Convention from the Central Intelligence Agency rather than the State Department because the department was a "political" and "policymaking" body with which he would prefer not to deal on such matters.

Airlines Using Bases For Canada Traffic

With United States pilots refusing to fly into Canada because of support for a strike by Canadian pilots, United States airlines are offering combined plane and bus transportation from New York to Canadian cities.

Eastern and Allegheny Airlines, which normally fly to Montreal, are flying passengers to Burlington, Vt., and taking them on a three-hour bus trip from there to Montreal. Allegheny and American Airlines, which usually have service to Toronto, are now flying passengers to Buffalo and then transporting them in two-and-a-half hours by bus to Toronto. Air Canada, the major line to Montreal and Toronto, is not operating at all.

Canadian pilots suspended operations last Monday, except for a few regional airlines, in protest against the Government's proposal to authorize use of French as well as English for air traffic control at airports in French-speaking Quebec.

Carolina Governor Doubts Most of South Backs Carter

COLUMBIA, S.C., June 27 (UPI)—Gov. James F. Edwards said today that a majority of Southerners would not vote for former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter, whom he described as a man who wants to grant amnesty "to the yellow-bellies who were afraid to fight in Vietnam."

Governor Edwards, speaking to the South Carolina delegation to the Republican National Convention, said he believed Ronald Reagan could counter Mr. Carter's popularity and win election in November. But said all Republicans must support the party's Presidential nominee, whoever he is.

"I don't believe the South will buy Jimmy Carter," Mr. Edwards said. "He is nothing more than a Southern-talking George McGovern."

Ford's Jersey Leader Warns on Reagan

By RONALD SULLIVAN
The chairman of President Ford's nomination campaign in New Jersey said yesterday that a victory at the National Republican Convention for former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California would be a "disaster" for the Republican Party in the state.

Thomas H. Kean, the Assembly minority leader, who is the top Ford official in the state, said that New Jersey had a reputation for political moderation and that Mr. Reagan represented the extreme conservative wing of the Republican Party.

Appearing on WCBS-TV's "Newsmakers" program, Mr. Kean said that if Mr. Reagan won the nomination the party would be faced with the same fate it suffered in 1964 when it was buried in the political wreckage of Senator Barry Goldwater's defeat.

While Mr. Kean's remarks were not all that surprising, given his reputation as a Republican liberal, they nevertheless underscored the mounting pressure in the state to force a commitment in favor of Mr. Ford from the delegates elected in the Presidential primary on June 8. The delegates representing the party's state and county organizations and led by Senator Clifford P. Case, days ago, "After conferring were elected on an uncommitted but pro-Ford platform. Last week, Vice President Rockefeller urged the delegation to commit itself to President Ford, contending that the move could provide the "momentum" to give him the nomination. However, a majority of the delegates rejected such a commitment the day before Mr. Rockefeller made his appeal, and Senator Case is apparently content to keep the delegation's uncommitted posture intact for the time being.

But Mr. Kean said yesterday that he would press Mr. Case and other Republican leaders in the state to make a commitment in favor of the President within the next few weeks.

As for Mr. Reagan's support in a delegation that could prove to be crucial at the convention, Republican leaders estimated that he could count on as many as six or seven votes if they meant his winning the nomination. Otherwise, the same leaders said, Mr. Ford could win virtually all 67 delegates if they meant his winning.

In other words, both sides in the race perceive the likelihood that a small number of New Jersey delegates will attempt to play kingmaker roles at the convention if the race is decided by a handful of votes.

with the officials, they were referred to Turkish authorities," the statement said.

The father and son hijacked a passenger plane on Oct. 15, 1970, during a flight inside Soviet Georgia, and forced the plane to land in Turkey. A flight attendant was killed and three other crew members were injured during the incident.

At a subsequent trial, the son was acquitted and the father received an eight-year prison term. He was freed in 1974, and the two were placed in the refugee camp by the Turkish authorities, who denied requests by the Soviet Union for their return.

Soviet Hijackers Refused Asylum by a U.S. Embassy

ANKARA, Turkey, June 27 (AP)—A Lithuanian father and son who hijacked a Soviet plane to Turkey six years ago made an unsuccessful bid for asylum at the United States Embassy, officials there said today.

A statement said Pranas Brazinskas-Koreivo and his son, Algirdas, had been in contact with the embassy after leaving the refugee camp in the Anatolian town of Yozgat four days ago. "After conferring

New York City is Facing a Health Crisis!

VOLUNTARY HOSPITALS—THE PROVIDERS OF THE FINEST PATIENT CARE IN THIS CITY AND IN THIS COUNTRY—ARE FACED WITH A CRISIS WHICH THREATENS IRREPARABLE DAMAGE TO THE QUALITY OF HEALTH CARE YOU AND YOUR FAMILIES RECEIVE IN THESE NON-PROFIT INSTITUTIONS.

The members of District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees want a cost of living increase. We do not have the ability, based on our controlled reimbursement, to meet such a demand. The Union, representing 40,000 workers of our hospitals and nursing homes, HAS GIVEN NOTICE OF ITS INTENT TO STRIKE OUR INSTITUTIONS ON JULY 7TH IF IT DOES NOT ACHIEVE ITS DEMANDS.

Most of this operating income of our non-profit facilities is money they receive for the care they give patients. New York State, which sets the rates at which Blue Cross and Medicaid pay our institutions for patient care, has not allowed a rate increase since January 1975, eighteen months ago. Since then we have incurred cost increases—in malpractice insurance, energy, cost of supplies and wages and benefits.

NO ONE DISPUTES THAT THIS CARE IS COSTLY and that rational steps should be taken to control these costs. However, the need for quality care remains. Our hospital beds, nursing home beds remain virtually filled, and we too need income to survive.

Otherwise, we in New York City are in danger of a severe reduction of services—open heart surgery, kidney dialysis, transplants, cancer therapy, cardiac care, long-term care for the elderly, and other life sustaining services.

We have already reduced payroll by layoffs and attrition and have effected extensive economies while maintaining quality patient services. We have now been pushed to the breaking point. We are adamant about not going beyond this point.

Should we eliminate our very costly outpatient services which provide medical care to hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers to whom it is otherwise unavailable? Should we diminish or discontinue some of the life-saving services which you, the public need and to which you are entitled?

WE DO NOT INTEND TO DO THIS. WE KNOW THAT YOU WOULD NOT WANT US TO DO THIS. WE SHOULD NOT BE FORCED TO MAKE THIS CHOICE.

Gies Are Pragmatic in Republican Camps

By W. Apple Jr.
Special to the New York Times

June 27 delegates urged them to insist on the President's scarce representation of thinkers who...

The arguments, in short, were tailored to fit the local tactical realities.

Thus, in Minnesota, the Reaganites, who controlled about 83 percent of the delegates to the state convention, proposed a deal whereby they would have been given six of the 18 at-large delegates as a gesture to party harmony. They were turned down cold and wound up with one delegate.

In Montana, where Mr. Ford won 35 percent of the vote in the nonbinding June 1 primary, the President's supporters argued that they should be allocated four of the 14 at-large delegates. Wearing T-shirts emblazoned with the slogan, "Fairness and Unity," they tacked up crude posters that said, "A split decision is better than a TKO."

They were still shut out. In New Mexico, where there were no primary results on which to base such an argument, the Ford partisans insisted that the Reaganites should yield seats to popular officeholders such as Senator Pete V. Domenick and Representative Manuel Lujan Jr., despite their support of the President. The Reagan camp, aware of the value of such gestures in...

Connally Concedes Panel's Ads Had Little Effect on Italian Voting

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, June 27—John R. Connally's Committee for Freedom in the Mediterranean, which took full-page advertisements in several Eastern newspapers recently, had "no substantial effect" on Campaign Notes Italian elections last weekend, Mr. Connally cheerfully conceded today.

Mr. Connally's reading of anti-Communist politics in Italy, his new hobby, is "The Christian Democrats have another chance. It depends now on how well they restructure themselves and face up to their problems."

In American party politics, Mr. Connally's fund-raising letter for the Republican National Committee has just raised $800,000, close to a Republican record, and he will be the star of the committee's strip of five-minute fund-raising spots that will be broadcast nationally each night in the week after the Democratic National Convention next month.

A fence-sitter in the Ford-Reagan Presidential race who could be talked into the Vice-Presidential nomination by either winner, Mr. Connally, a former Governor of Texas, believes "the odds still favor the President." Neither President Ford nor Ronald Reagan has run a "faultless campaign," he remarks. "Particularly Reagan is going to have to broaden his horizons to offer a hope and a vision for the country," he adds.

Jean Westwood of Utah, who became her party's national chairman at the last Democratic convention, will not be a delegate to this year's convention in Madison Square Garden. She was formally stricken from the Utah delegation last week after she failed to appear at the state convention.

Ben Goddard, the Carter campaign's Western states coordinator, told reporters that Mr. Carter had in fact promised Mr. Unruh a delegate seat. But Mr. Carter's California troops decided that in adding latecomers to their list, the emphasis should be on balancing the delegation with women, young voters and racial minorities.

Mr. Unruh originally supported Senator Henry H. Jackson of Washington. Yesterday's rebuff will not diminish Mr. Unruh's importance for Mr. Carter, said his press secretary, but it was "not a very good way of handling people."

Ronald Reagan's operatives were happily surprised at the evenhandedness of the Ford-dominated Republican National Committee in granting 200 visitors' passes for the Kansas City convention to each candidate's organization. Then, it turned out, the committee decided to issue 450 more visitors' passes to "the White House." Vehement protests brought the Reagan pass quota up to 300. But key arrangements are still in the hands of the national committee, which last week named two Ford supporters to conspicuous jobs: Senator Robert Dole of Kansas to be...

Sidney Korshak's Power Rooted In His Link to Labor Chieftains

Continued From Page 1, Col. 4. labor associations have been with the Teamsters union, its former president, Mr. Hoffa, and such underworld Mafia associates as the late Paul (Red) Dorfman.

Agency Said to Get Excessive Fees. In 1964, according to police records, Mr. Korshak purchased $25,000 worth of stock in the Dorfman insurance agency.

Large Concerns Become Clients. Within a year, however, he was representing some of the city's most prominent businesses, including Spiegel Inc., the mail order house; National Video; and a number of furniture and manufacturing companies.

Higher Wages In Other Contracts. Subsequent Senate testimony showed that the contract negotiated by Mr. Korshak and the Teamsters at one plant called for wages as much as 30 cents an hour lower than those specified in union contracts for similar union employed workers at other Englehard plants.

Link to Member Of Capone Mob. Many of Mr. Korshak's early clients, the businessman said, knew of his link to Murray (The Camel) Humphreys, a senior member of the Capone mob who was widely considered to be the key to the underworld's infiltration of Chicago unions.

Peters Invokes Fifth Amendment. Mr. Peters, a strong supporter of Mr. Hoffa, was one of the first Teamster officials to do business with the Dorfman insurance agency.

Major Las Vegas hotels and casinos. A 1969 Justice Department memorandum that was obtained by The Times called the settlement a "sweetheart" agreement that violated the rules of the National Labor Relations Board.

Korshak Dismissed By Hotel Unit. The association dismissed Mr. Korshak, casino operators said in recent interviews, after the Summa Corporation began making heavy investments in Las Vegas and decided that the gambling city needed a cleaner image.

Business Methods Called Unusual. Lawyers representing both labor and management talk with wonder about Mr. Korshak's pattern of operation, which is unusual because he keeps no notes, no files, brings no documents with him to complex negotiations.

Dodger Parking Contract Negotiated. In another case, Mr. Korshak was retained by the Los Angeles Dodgers to negotiate with a group of Teamsters parking-lot attendants who were threatening a crippling strike before the opening of the new Dodger Stadium.

Choice of Counsel. One associate recalls that Mr. Korshak was directly responsible for the appointment of Stanford Clinton, a Chicago lawyer, now retired, as general counsel of the pension fund.

Contract Negotiated. In another case, Mr. Korshak was retained by the Los Angeles Dodgers to negotiate with a group of Teamsters parking-lot attendants who were threatening a crippling strike before the opening of the new Dodger Stadium.

Jazz Festival Proclaims It-Count Basie Day, Venerable Eubie Blake Steals Show

WILSON (New York Times)
LLAGE, N. J. (New York Times)
 as "Count Basie Day" in New Jersey in honor of the pianist and bandleader whose band is the New York City's "day" of jazz. It was not that Mr. Basie's performance was so rhythmically powerful or so precise that it could overshadow the ensemble finesse of Mr. Basie's band. Rather there was such vitality in this venerable musician's projection that it generated an electricity that the same polished routines that it had played after night, could never quite match.

Plays Flamenco Azucena Dancers

the bassist is feeling so...
 other of the ingredients that contributed to his earlier successes... a chemistry between leader and soloists, a healthy symbiosis between written materials and improvisations, a certain intensity. This time everything was in place. Mr. Mingus was one of the first jazz composers to call for energetic collective improvisations on a single chord, to ask musicians to play on constantly shifting harmonic and melodic structures, and to consciously adapt materials and practices from Afro-American religious services to the demands of modern jazz.

Duke Band Plays Trained Jazz-Rock

he drummer, about life, love and interplanetary travel, the music was rock in virtually every respect. Most of the evening was instrumental, however, with composing credits going equally to Mr. Cobham, Mr. Duke and Mr. Johnson.

strain of frequent performances on Mr. Blake's energies has often been evident. But last night he was really "up," in fine fettle, playing piano with a clean, positive drive, singing in a strong voice—even though he faked his way out of the ending of his song "I'm Just Wild About Harry" ("I can't make that high note," he admitted cheerfully)—and talking with great animation and gusto as he rested between musical numbers. He was, if anything, better than ever going into his 94th year.

Mr. Basie, a mere 71, paid tribute to "the young man" who had preceded him at the piano and, while his own work at the keyboard has lost none of its sly, rhythmic subtlety, his hand, which was showing signs of new life a year ago, has settled back into its characteristic polished but impersonal routines. The arrangements, which are rarely generated from within the band, are cut to a pattern—an identifiable "Basie pattern"—which has been established over a long period and allows for little deviation. Once the elegance and power of the ensemble have been established, which were done quickly last night, the occasional enlivening sparks came from the rugged tenor saxophone of Jimmy Forrest, Al Gray's use of a plunger mute on his trombone and, of course, the deft finger-flicking of Mr. Basie.

Here in Waterloo Village, a restored colonial town an hour's drive from New York City, the jazz festival has found a suitable outdoor setting, which it lost when it moved from Newport in 1972. In a tent on landscaped grounds adjoining the restored houses, a gospel picnic kept the area filled with urgent and intensely rhythmic singing yesterday afternoon.

Organized by Wyatt Tee Walker and under the musical direction of Clinton Utterbach, nine choral groups and five soloists rang the changes on gospel singing from traditional styles to contemporary approaches that clothed the stylistic roots of gospel singing in rhythms that parallel today's pop music. The ensembles, dressed in colorful robes—orange, yellow, lime green, brown and buff, gray, red—vied with each other in generating energy, enthusiasm, vocal pyrotechnics and precisely drilled visual effects.

An article about the Gospel picnic appears on page 29.

A Ring of Lardners

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

My Family Remembered. By Ring Lardner Jr. 371 pages. Illustrated. $12.95.

Pages or so of "The Lardners Remembered," by Ring Lardner Jr., devoted to family genealogy, which genealogy tends to put off when it seems to have to do with the subject of the book. I laid "The Lardners Remembered" down when I first looked at it.

Ring Lardner Jr.

He Lardner Sr.'s contributions to the field of genealogy—how he was the first person to actually sound out his own name through "Fowler's Usage."

Finest Trivia His three brothers' careers poke of the pros and cons of the field with the named over their premature deaths. Fitzgerald came up, the first Dempsey-Tunney fight. Lardner's own ordeal of the blacklisted Hollywood upon. Soon I couldn't wait to read "The Lardners Remembered" again, to get to genealogy, and to read to sound like a thoroughly.

It was right in the first at genealogy signaled, he er esteems his family con- than at least this reader; in fact, he seems to feel ything its members did or ording simply for its own is this attitude apparant hat the book's narrative; except to get the family's paper; it is evident too in sumpation that the reader in the minutest Lardner are the author's memories. Were there three Lardner children or two in the bathtub alongside the author when the likes of Beatrice Lillie and Dorothy Parker first glimpsed him as a small child? How consistent was Ring Lardner Sr. about writing "fellow" as "fella" instead of "feller?" This overvaluation even takes on a note of defensiveness in Mr. Lardner's indictment of the "literary critics and historians, whose lethal occupation is the dissection of living prose," for refusing "to take [Ring Lardner] to their bosoms" because "he wrote for, and managed to please, the conspicuously nonintellectual readers of the popular magazines." If Mr. Lardner is so sure of his father's status as a popular artist, why does he even bother with those critics who were clearly more interested in the avant-garde?

Enduring Appeal

Not that there isn't much about the Lardner family worth rating extremely high. The father was a bittersweet humorist of enduring appeal—a fact that is confirmed not only by many anecdotes that his son recalls here ("How do you look when I'm sober?" Lardner once asked a flamboyantly dressed actor at the Lambs Club), but also by a new collection—"Some Champions: Sketches and Fiction by Ring Lardner," edited by Matthew J. Bruccoli and Richard Layman (205 pages, Scribner's, $8.95)—which, if not up to the very best of Lardner, proves that even his second best has stood the test of time. Ring Jr.'s two older brothers, John and Jim, and his younger brother, David, obviously inherited their father's wit and reportorial skills; if not his path-finding originality. And as for the author's mother, Ellis Abbott Lardner—the picture that emerges here of her early years, before the deaths of her husband and children began to darken her spirits, breathes new life into the old cliché that someone who enjoys life makes life enjoyable for others.

But to premise an entire memoir on the family's inherent appeal—that is so far out of bounds as to make one wonder if it was some stimulus other than affection that moved Mr. Lardner to record his memories. Could it have been guilt over being the only child of the four to live longer than the 48 years his father did? Or was it connected in some obscure way with the undeniable streak of self-destructiveness that seems to have been present in all the male members of the family? One cannot presume to speculate. Mr. Lardner reveals too little of himself in these pages—not anything else from the psychological depths beyond the speculation that the source of his father's unhappiness lay in his prudishness. Unfortunately, the excellence of the family is not sufficient to fill the resulting vacuum.

Getting Smart

By Josiah Bunting 3d

BRIARCLIFF MANOR, N.Y.— Senator Roman L. Hruska's remarks, some years ago, about providing suitable representation on the United States Supreme Court for mediocre people—mediocre justices—still evokes the knowing snigger of the American intellectual. Of course it should. There should be no place on the high court of, say, 1995-2015, for men and women whose Law Boards in 1976 sank one iota below 785, who did not, as undergraduates and as law students, win sufficient piñatas and medals, prizes, guerdons and dollars to make themselves top-heavy with pride and ambition. "More brains, dear God, more brains!" screamed George Meredith. More brains are what is needed. That is nonsense. Yet it is mainly upon that dubious, exclusionary principle that many of the best American colleges and universities continue to fill up their undergraduate ranks—with a leaven of freshmen to salve the consciences of administrators and bursars: young people, let us say, who are not so "bright" but who are either "members of minority groups" (whose only commendation, in some cases, is that they are members of minority groups) or freshman who are maybe a little off the wall: "Geez, this kid built his own pedal-propelled airplane, and flew it from Saybrook to Clinton."

There is plenty of room in our best colleges for studious conners of what are called textbooks, for hypertensive grade-grubbers, for College Board dazzlers. For the rest, for those whose attainments are not of the sort society rewards, who "rank high" neither in "class standing" nor verbal Scholastic Aptitude Tests, there is nothing but attendance at colleges that are called second-rate, or the "job-market," or, shall we say, the Volunteer Army. And it is precisely from the ranks of those of each touch the lives of all. And it is in the latter mission, and the process by which those whose contributions to it, in college and after, might be estimable, that those who have not always made successful obeisance before the bitch-goddess of the College Boards too frequently are flipped to the reject pile on the desks of admissions officers. Evidence to give patient, unworward service to their communities should be a critical element upon which admission to colleges is based. Those whose instinct so dictates will not uncommonly be found to possess brains, and those brains can be cultivated, and those students who will lead and serve this country later: patiently, honestly, doggedly. It is among these young people that will, more often than not, be found the George Catlett Marshalls, the Sam Rayburns, the Lincolns. And besides, twenty years after they leave college, they will not be reading the latest silly best-selling nonfiction palaver on "interpersonal relations," but Burke, and Thucydides, and Sterne and Melville. For their education will not have interfered with their learning. It is not anti-intellectualism to say so. It is plain common sense, which, in the case of our sparking citadels of what is called higher learning, we have not got. And we'd better get it, fast. Josiah Bunting 3d is president of Briarcliff College.

The Other Mayor

By William V. Shannon

BOSTON, June 27—This tired city has two mayors. One is U. S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. who personally directs the administration of the strife-torn public school system in an effort to carry through his far-reaching plan for desegregation and school reform.

The other is Mayor Kevin H. White, the elected chief executive who struggles to prevent this racially tense city from blowing itself up and to find the money to pay for the busing, the extra police, and the administrative costs of Judge Garrity's plan.

Two weeks ago, the Supreme Court refused to review Judge Garrity's handiwork. Legally, this marked the end of a decade of controversy here, for Judge Garrity's 1974 decision was the Federal sequel to eight years of angry but inconclusive dispute between the Boston School Committee and the State of Massachusetts over a 1955 state law on racial balance in the schools. The indisputable issue is whether after years of wrangling and, more recently, intermittent violence, the definitive rejection by the Supreme Court will bring Boston the peace of exhaustion—or a further descent into hellish conflict.

The Garrity plan has created as many problems as it has solved. Between 1972 and 1975, while the number of black pupils held steady at 31,000, the number of white pupils declined from 56,800 to 36,200. Enrollment in September may register a further drop. The material costs of the racial struggle are evident in the municipal budget, and an anticipated steep increase in the property tax, already about the nation's highest. While spending by all other departments over the last four years rose by only 5 percent, school spending has risen by 46 percent. Police Department costs also rose because police worked overtime to cope with anti-busing disturbances: 300 state and local police have been stationed in the corridors of South Boston High School and in nearby streets.

The city can ill afford the financial burdens of racial confrontation. Boston is the capital of an economically declining region. Recessions last longer here and recovery is slower. The unemployment rate in Boston is above 11 percent, more than half again as high as the national average. The invisible social costs have been even more devastating. Boston's pride and self-confidence have been damaged. In the 1960's, hope was in the city in Boston, a conviction that the city could meet and master its problems.

One symbol of that hope was the Boston Government Center, one of the nation's most ambitious urban renewal projects. When this huge complex of public and private buildings was completed in 1972, architecture critic Ada Louise Huxtable wrote: "Boston has been brought handsomely—and by and large sensitively—into the skyscraper age."

Another symbol of hope was Mayor White himself. The handsome, articulate scion of a well-known Irish political family and a graduate of Williams College, Kevin White—like John F. Kennedy—is a stylish union of the old and the new in Boston. Elected Mayor in 1967 at age 38, Mr. White surrounded himself with exceptionally able young aides and tried to bring Boston into the mainstream of modern ideas about municipal government.

He recruited a police commissioner from St. Louis to revitalize Boston's ingrown Police Department. He opened 15 "Little City Halls" to try to improve the delivery of city services to neighborhoods. He brought numerous blacks into public life, so much so that when he ran successfully for re-election in 1971 against Louise Day Hicks, he was known in some quarters as "Mayor Black."

To those who knew his record, it did not seem unreasonable that Mr. White once entertained the idea of running for national office this year. That dream disappeared in the rancor and futility of the busing struggle.

On the eve of the opening of schools under the busing plan in September, 1974, Mayor White warned in a telecast, "No man, not even a President, stands above the law. And no city, or group within it, can stand in defiance of the law."

Mayor White has kept the peace and upheld the law. He has also kept open his lines of communication to both the white and black communities, the latter's support providing him with his wafer-thin margin of re-election votes last November. But he has been battered by waves of passion from former supporters who see him as "selling out" to the blacks and from blacks and suburban liberals who see him as insufficiently zealous for integration. In fact, he has no authority in school matters yet has to cope with the financial consequences and social turmoil created by the demagoguery of the School Committee and the willful heroics of Judge Garrity. The pressures are wearing but now that the Supreme Court has spoken, Mayor White sees ground for hope that he can in coming months bring this beleaguered city to a renewed sense of itself and of the positive elements in its situation.

After the Corporation

By Gar Alperovitz and Jeff Faux

WASHINGTON — We Americans must begin to consider how we will replace the large corporation as the central institution of our economy. In the remaining quarter of the 20th century we will face slower economic growth and increasing limitations of resources. These historically new problems require strategies that are incompatible with an inherent characteristic of an economy dominated by large corporate enterprises: its compulsion toward indiscriminate and resource-using growth. First, in order to avoid the dire social consequences of slower growth, we will need a much more equitable distribution of income and wealth. Second, the sacrifices required by this will in turn require a much greater sense of community, and therefore planning, to achieve a greater stability of community in America. Third, to deal with growing resource limits, we will need new policies for conservation and much more efficient allocation of resources for human priorities. On all three counts, the modern corporation falls short. The corporation is a device for perpetuating the maldistribution of income and wealth. Despite social programs and a progressive income tax, the distribution of income and wealth in the United States has been virtually unchanged for 40 years—if anything, both have worsened recently. The corporation is a source of constant upheaval and instability in the lives of people who do not belong to it, and many who do. Communities are uprooted, neighborhoods destroyed, tax bases eroded (and tax rates forced up), and large-scale migrations are produced by corporate investment and location decisions made with little reference to the social consequences. Finally, as many observers have pointed out the corporation is inherently an engine based on growth. Its primary and overriding motivation is to stimulate profitable sales and more consumption—regardless of whether the society can afford it. As we move deeper into the economic difficulties of the final quarter of the century, we will accordingly have to evolve new institutions that emphasize greater equality, stability, conservation and community. We need to support small-scale, community-centered businesses that can prosper without explosive growth. We need public control over capital and natural resources, so both can be allocated according to public priorities. To encourage a sense of community, we need local job stabilization, more employee participation in work-place decisions, and much more direct citizen involvement in local economic institutions and in public planning—from neighborhood to nation. In connection with some larger economic functions, we will need to replace the large corporation with new institutions directly accountable to public priorities. A mosaic of new ideas, experiments and proposals reflecting these emergent needs is in fact already beginning to develop in America. For example: • Interest in worker participation in management and even ownership of corporations, once beyond the political pale, is now urged by political figures as far apart as Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Elliot L. Richardson, Senator Russell B. Long and former Senator Fred Harris. • Consumer cooperatives are growing rapidly in middle-class communities. • Local community-controlled development corporations that support nonprofit business ownership are expanding in hundreds of low-income communities. • After years of neglect, strong support for local public ownership of land, utilities and even banks has developed in a significant number of state legislatures and city councils. • Numerous Senators have supported a federally-owned oil and gas corporation. • Henry S. Reuss, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, has proposed Federal allocation of bank credit and the nationalization of a major bank. • Senator Edward M. Kennedy has introduced legislation providing, under certain circumstances, for a public trust to own some auto firms' subsidiaries that produce mass-transit equipment. The transition to new forms of organization beyond the giant corporation will not occur overnight; nor is it inevitable. The process is enormously complex. And, as observers have pointed out, the corporation itself is evolving. But the stakes are too important to hope somehow the corporate leopard can change its spots. Both the strengths and weaknesses of the corporation are inherent in the species. Gar Alperovitz and Jeff Faux are co-directors of the Exploratory Project for Economic Alternatives, established by 25 foundations to define practical approaches to economic restructuring.

APRIL IN PARIS, OR A DAY AT THE HOSPITAL. $450.

That could be the price by 1980. If the present trends continue, some hospital stays in the Greater New York area could cost an average of $450 a day by 1980. Certain hospital stays in Manhattan already cost $300 a day. And you can get a packaged week-long trip to Paris for little more: $469.

What is Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York doing about it? We have a number of programs to help hospitals to attain higher levels of efficiency and contain costs. But another thing we can do is to save that room charge by treating people on an out-patient basis. Such as "Ambulatory Surgery", where a patient has minor surgery and goes home the same day. For several years now, we've paid more claims for out-patients than in-patients. Many of our out-patient benefits were among the first in the country. And remain among the best. So we not only save room cost, but patients can lead more normal lives at home. How home care saves hospital dollars. Since 1960 we've been showing the whole country how home care benefits can save money and make patients happier. Under our program, a patient can leave the hospital earlier and recuperate at home. Patients get all the medication, equipment, and nursing they need. And they feel better because they're at home with their family and friends. Getting second opinions on surgery: two heads may be cheaper than one. Would a second specialist's opinion on elective surgery reduce the number of unnecessary operations? A study cited by Congress indicates it might: board-certified specialists disagreed 17.6% of the time with the original opinion. Thus, while we're not prejudging the results, we're now making second surgical opinion available to "experienced" groups as an added benefit. Subscribers in these groups can get an opinion on elective surgery from a second specialist at no cost to themselves. We are hopeful that this program will save surgery, money, and hospital use while improving the quality of health care. The home "kidney machine" saves lives and saves money. We were the first Blue Cross and Blue Shield plan in the country to offer the new home hemodialysis equipment as one of our benefits. Since 1972, we have made out-patient hemodialysis treatment plus actual in-home dialysis equipment available as one of our benefits. Kidney sufferers whose conditions are stabilized can now lead nearly normal lives. And each of them can save about $20,000 a year as well. Be informed. We need your help. We want you to become interested and informed. Learn what new cost-containment programs are being proposed. Think them over. We need the support of every citizen in our work toward cost containment.

THE MOST GLORIOUS 4TH

"We are not a narrow tribe of men," wrote Melville, "Our blood is as the flood of the Amazon, made up of a thousand noble currents all pouring into one. We are not a nation so much as a world." This week, as our American world edges into its third century, the editors of TIME pay joyous tribute to its diversity and vitality, its heritage, its customs, its singular culture and the extravagant plans for celebrating its birthday of birthdays. Included: 15 color pages on The Tall Ships, on American landscape art and architecture, and on the many decorative uses for good old Red, White and Blue; TIME this week: lively, articulate reportage animated by a humane and intelligent curiosity.

Thousands Flock to Rhode Island to See Ships and Spend Money

By JOHN KIFNER

Finley Yields on Playing of 3 A's, Averts Strike

Finley is coming to bat in the second inning yesterday. He fled out to right field.

OAKLAND, Calif., June 27 (UPI) — The Oakland A's played today after Charles O. Finley, their owner, averted a strike by agreeing to Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's directive to reinstate three star players to active duty immediately.

for the 1976 season and were sold in rapid-fire order just before the June 15 trading deadline, with Finley claiming that otherwise they might leave the team at the end of the season without providing any compensation for him.

in the sixth inning and the A's leading, 4-3, and retired Larry Hisle with runners on second and third. He gave up only two hits and three walks while striking out five the rest of the way.

They were greeted by cheers from the fans. In his statement, Finley had a parting shot for Kuhn, whom he previously called a "village idiot."

Following Finley's rejection of the A's players' request Friday to Rudi, Fingers and Blue, the A's player representative, Jim Todd, said the team voted, 30-0 with two abstentions, to strike.

Finley said his $10 million suit filed against Kuhn and baseball last week in protesting the sale ban would not get under way before Aug. 2.

User Is First To Win At Pocono

By MICHAEL KATZ Special to The New York Times June 27 change, he lost a 2 1/2-mile lap when he came into the pits under a green light and the remainder of the 33-car field caught a "yellow"; he lost another lap when he ran over some debris and his left rear tire was punctured, almost sending him spinning into the wall in front of the pits; and finally, with less than 10 laps remaining for his first United States Auto Club championship victory in almost two years, he began to hear his revolutionary engine sputter.

"The last five laps it was missing very bad," said the 37-year-old driver who won the 1970 and 1971 Indianapolis 500's, and I didn't think we would finish.

Mike Mosley, a 29-year-old driver who quit last November because he was "tired of racing," and returned this season because he "wanted to race," didn't hear Unser's engine sputter. But Mosley, ever, in second place, was hoping something would go wrong with Unser's new Cosworth engine; after all, there were reports that the V-8 design would eat fuel and that it could not last 500 miles.

"That's why I kept trying at the end," said Mosley, whose Offenhauser-powered Eagle was no match for Unser's car in speed. "I thought maybe on the last lap or half-lap he would run out of fuel."

But it turned out to be Unser's day anyway. He fought back from two laps down, took the lead for good with 100 miles remaining, averaged 143.622 miles an hour and won $84,340. Mosley, who won a USAC race at Milwaukee two weeks ago, earned $42,350 and Wally Dallenbach, third in one of

Jankunis Wins At 7-5 3/4

By FRANK LITSKY Special to The New York Times EUGENE, Ore., June 27—Bill Jankunis of Staten Island won the high-jump competition today at the United States Olympic track trials ended. The only person as happy as he was his new part-time coach, Dwight Stones, who finished second and also made the United States team.

Jankunis, Stones, James Barrineau of Georgia and Mel Embree of Harvard cleared 7 feet 3 3/4 inches, Barrineau on his last try. Jankunis, Stones and Barrineau all made 7-4 1/2, all qualifying for the team.

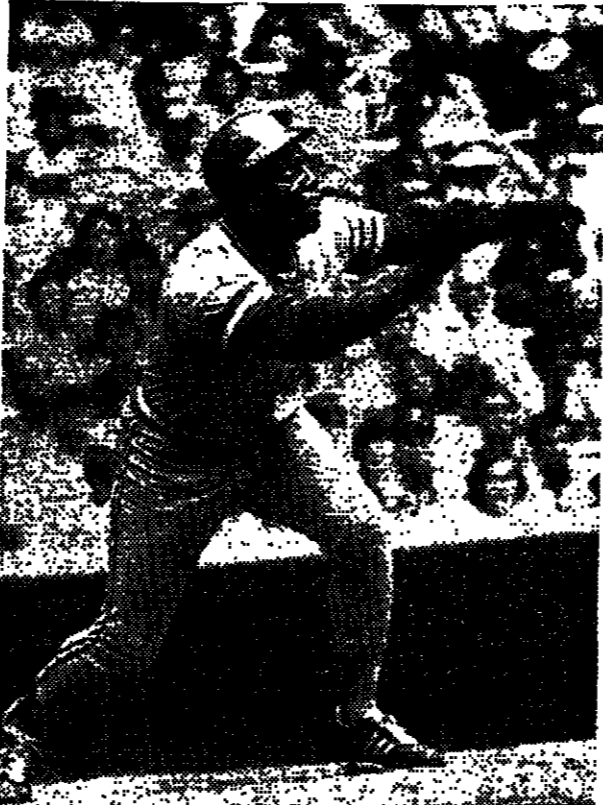

The drama should have been over, but it was just getting warm. The standing-room crowd of 16,200 at Hayward Field screamed as Jankunis cleared 7-5 3/4, his best ever, and the others missed. Then Jankunis made three attempts to break the world record of 7-7 set by Stones three weeks ago in Philadelphia.

With the bar at 7-7 1/4, he almost flopped over successfully, barely brushing the bar. He conferred with Stones after each jump, but the record survived.

Stones is a 22-year-old student at Long Beach State, the Olympic favorite and a roving ambassador of high jumping who likes to share his technical knowledge with rivals. Two weeks ago in the Amateur Athletic Union national championships at Los Angeles, Stones took Jankunis aside and told him:

"If you work a little to keep your arms up on your jump-up, you will make it."

Yankees Rout Brewers, 6-2, 10-2, Before 41,249 Sweep Series With Hunter and Tidrow

Roy White of the Yankees goes high against the wall to catch the drive.

By THOMAS ROGERS It seemed not just like old times at Yankee Stadium yesterday. In many ways, it was better.

Twelve years away from their last American League pennant and the era in which they dominated their opposition with power, the new Yankees have zip, vitality and freshness which the old, domineering Bronx bombers never developed.

The new qualities—and all the assets that make a winning team—were in evidence as the Yankees delighted a crowd of 41,249 by crushing the Milwaukee Brewers in a doubleheader, 6-2 and 10-2.

The twin triumphs gave the Yankees a sweep of a four-game series with the Brewers and pushed their current winning streak to five games. They concluded an eight-game home stand with six victories and only two losses. With a comfortable nine-game lead in the Eastern division, they leave today for seven games in Detroit and Cleveland.

Yesterday, the fans couldn't figure out who deserved the loudest cheers.

Mickey Rivers ran his hitting streak to 20 games with a single in the opener and three more hits in the nightcap. He got 18 hits in 36 times at bat during the home stand and raised his average to .330.

Mets Win, 13-3, With 8 Runs in Second

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY Special to The New York Times CHICAGO, June 27—The New York Mets unloaded their biggest inning in six years, an eight-run second, and coasted to a 13-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs at Wrigley Field today.

The victory was their third over the Cubs this weekend and sent the Mets home to Shea Stadium with a 4-2 won-lost record for the week on the road. They remain 14 games behind the Phillies in the National League East, however, even though they are a .500 team again at 37-37.

The Mets were sorry to leave Chicago, where they scored 30 runs in three games after scoring a total of 16 runs in the nine games before that. Mike Phillips had three homers in the three games—his total homer production for the season—as he bid Wrigley Field a particularly fond goodbye.

Craig Swan, who has rarely had an easy time this season through lack of support from Met bats, could relax today after his teammates gave him a 9-0 lead after two innings.

"I just felt great," the right-hander said. "I could try things out there and work on stuff like keeping my fast-ball down instead of working from a disadvantage. We were ahead so early I hardly had to use my curveball at all."

The pitcher, a portly figure in previous seasons, lost 20 pounds this year and is pitching better as a result. "If you're overweight, you can't go around eating if you're not hungry," he said yesterday's near-fast. "You have to take advantage of every break you can get."

The Cubs' other two runs came off Skip Lockwood, who mopped up Lockwood, who has specialized in giving up the long ball in recent weeks, gave up a double to Jerry Morales and a homer

Frying under a merciless sun on the deck of a lifeless sailing ship drifting in the horse latitudes is not necessarily the ultimate in gracious living. Yet it has its compensations. While the stately queeps in Operation Snail '76 lay becalmed last week in their "race" from Bermuda to Newport, R. I., the men aboard were spared watching Muhammad Ali and Antonio Inoki on closed-circuit television. That was a privilege not accorded to everyone. Moreover, due to a distinct shortage of printing presses in the emptiness of the Bermuda Triangle, not one word was published there about the historic lovers' quarrel between Charlie Finley of the Oakland A's and Bowie Kuhn, the earthly vicar of Abner Doubleday. In short, though the pace of the sailboat race left something to be desired, the peace was blessed.

Back now on dry land—which, happily, is not so dry as the Coast Guard Academy's otherwise lovely training ship Eagle—one realizes that an obvious solution to baseball's teapot temper would be to rush Gene LeBell home from Tokyo to mediate the Finley-Kuhn differences. Or, if that didn't work, perhaps Reggie Jackson would renew his offer to take the A's off Finley's hands.

Meanwhile, Back on Dry Land...

players and the Commissioner beat him this time, chances are he'll get out.

When Kuhn refused to approve the $3.5 million sale of Blue, Rudi and Fingers and ordered the men back to Oakland, Finley refused to let them play on the ground that they were the property of the Yankees and Red Sox, that the New York and Boston clubs could sue if he used their property, and that he would be liable if one of them got hurt.

Blue Tomorrows

It looks as though Charlie's surrender to his players enabled him to beat another rap. Dick Moss, attorney for the players' union, had notified him that his refusal to restore Rudi, Blue and Fingers to the Oakland squad violated their contracts as his employees, and if he didn't do something about it they would become free agents in 10 days. He did something about it.

That doesn't mean, however, that Finley's capitulation settled all legal problems. He can drop his suit against Kuhn, of course, and maybe the Yankees and Red Sox won't take him to court. But what about the three players involved? Rudi and Fingers still haven't signed a contract for 1976 and can become free agents in October, but not Blue.

Donofrio Wins Title And Foil Team Spot

CHERRY HILL, N.J., June 27 (AP)—Lieut. Ed Donofrio, a Marine stationed in Quantico, Va., won the foil title in a fence-off last night at the National fencing championships. Donofrio defeated Ed Ballinger, the defending champion from New York 5-3, in the final bout of a four-way fence-off.

Donofrio won all three of his bouts. Ballinger took second place with a 2-1 record. Third place went to Michael Marx, a 17-year-old from Portland, Ore.

Ballinger, Donofrio, Ed Wright of New York and Marty Lang of New York will represent the United States in the foil competition. They made the team on points earned over a four-year period. John Nonna of New York was named alternate.

6 Picked in Gymnastics
UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa., June 27 (UPI)—A United States gymnastics team composed of six young men, different in strengths but similar in overall abilities, will head for Montreal tomorrow hoping to gain an Olympic medal in their sport for the first time since 1932.

Many experts think the six chosen over the weekend at final qualification trials at Penn State have a realistic crack at the bronze medal behind the virtually unbeatable Japanese and Russians. The American team will be led by Kurt Thomas, a senior at Indiana State whose consistent 9.8-plus scores on side horse make him a possible Olympic finalist in the event. Wayne Young, a Penn State graduate student, will compete on the rings. Tom Beach of Albany, Calif., comic of the squad who wears a mustache, qualified on the horizontal bar.

The youngest member is Bart Connor, an 18-year-old high school student from Morton Grove, Ill., who performs on the parallel bars. The only repeater from the 1972 team is Marshall Averer, 25. He and Gene Wheeler of Penn State should do well in six Olympic events. Pete Kormann of Southern Connecticut won the alternate spot.

Armstrong Is Repeater
BURLINGTON, Vt., June 27 (UPI)—Davey Armstrong will be the second United States boxer since 1924 to participate in the Olympic Games twice. He won a distinction with a victory in the featherweight class yesterday in the final set to select the American team.

Olympic team. I promise that.

"That's what he told me," said Jankunis. "That's what I was thinking about. I broke two personal records today and that was nice, but I just wanted to get on the team."

Was that a bigger kick than beating Stokes for the first time?
"Oh, yes," said Jankunis. "That's all that counted."

Jankunis is 20 years old and attended the University of Colorado for one year. At New Dorp High School, he won the New York City Public Schools Athletic League titles in the high jump and hurdles.

Embree is 21 years old and comes from Ann Arbor, Mich. He will enter Harvard Law School in the fall. He would have made the team had Barrineau failed on his last attempt at 7-7 1/2.

When he made it," said Embree, "I actually felt a little more relaxed, because I was still ahead on misses. I set a personal record and I'm happy I did as well as I did. I'm not crying."

When Barrineau made 7-4 1/2 and Embree failed, Barrineau ran toward Embree and they talked briefly.

"I said, 'I'm sorry, Mel,'" said Barrineau. "What did Embree say?" "What could he say?" said Barrineau.

There were five finals for men and three for women on this final day of the nine-day competition. Both 1,500-meter races were fast, exciting and forward.

The first three in the women's race were Cindy Poor of Saratoga, Calif., in 4:07.32, Jan Merrill of Waterford, Conn., in 4:07.35 and Francie Larrrieu of Long Beach, Calif., in 4:08.08, breaking the American record.

Miss Poor's winning margin was about an inch. Miss Larrrieu's husband, Mark Lutz, made the men's team in the 200-meter dash last Tuesday.

Qualifying for the men's team in 1,500 meters were Rick Wohlhuter of Chicago in 3:36.47, Matt Centowitz of the Bronx in 3:36.70 and Mike Durkin of Chicago in 3:36.72. Wohlhuter's time was the equivalent of a 3:53.8 mile. Like Miss Poor, he previously made the team in the 800-meter run.

Embree was an ICA4 champion. So were Dick Buerkle, formerly of Villanova, and Mike Roche, formerly of Rutgers, and both made the team. Buerkle did it the easy way, winning the 5,000-meter final in 13:26.6. Roche did it almost miraculously.

With about 70 meters to go in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, Roche had just overtaken Don Timm for third place when they reached the final hurdle. Roche fell over it heavily, and his Olympic dreams seemed over.

Logical, $14.40, Wins at Belmont

By GERALD ESKENAZI
Perhaps in a few days, Enoch Rea, a 72-year-old horse trainer, will stop second-guessing himself.

But yesterday he, the owner, and the jockey of Maribel's Troy left Belmont Park after Logical won the $43,525 Assault Handicap and wondered what might have happened if their sprinter hadn't extended himself on Saturday.

Maribel's Troy came into New York from the Midwest with the credentials that led many to believe he was the top sprinter in the United States.

On Saturday morning at Belmont they wanted to exercise him. But his jockey, Alan Paterson, was in Chicago. So the owner, William A. Wieland, used an exercise boy.

"I wanted him to work the horse out in 37 or 38 seconds," said Wieland. Instead, Maribel's Troy made the clockers gasp with a time of 34 1/5 for three furlongs. It was the fastest workout of the day at the distance. Most of the Racing Form's comment on the workout was "full of run."

"I was there," said Paterson, "I would have punched the rider."

In the Assault Handicap, Maribel's Troy led most of the seven furlongs. But he was also being high weight of 122 pounds.

Yet, the handsome chestnut gelding didn't give up at the end. It was just that Logical, carrying only 108 pounds, closed strongly from off a fast pace.

Logical took the lead on the turn and went on to win by 2 1/4 lengths. The time of 1:21 1/5 was only four-fifths off the track mark.

After Logical won the Assault to return $14.40 for a $2 straight bet, his owner, Russell L. Reineman, collected the winner's share of $24,115, as well as a souvenir from Warren Mehrtens, the jockey who rode Assault to the Triple Crown in 1946.

American Heavy was third behind the 9 1/2 second favorite, Queen City Lad, the Prouds and Bold was last.

Rea had never flown before coming from the Midwest for this trip. He is small and frail, so short that Wieland had to help him reach the strap under the colt's saddle.

This was only Maribel's Troy's third defeat in 16 starts. He had captured his last two starts by a total of 14 lengths, including a track mark for six furlongs at Hawthorne.

Saturday's second-fastest workout was turned in by Prouds and Bold, whose 68-year-old trainer-owner, Robert van Worp, wasn't unhappy.

"Maybe the time will help him, maybe it will hurt him. You never know," he said. "I'm handling him myself," said van Worp, "because I can't find a trainer I'm happy with. My wife wants me to quit and stay home in Tampa. She thinks I'm getting old and rickety. Maybe I am. Except when I win."

Al Unser Triumphs in Schaefer 500

George Bignotti's Wildcats, John Rutherford, who won the abbreviated Indianapolis 500 last month, was fourth in a McLaren and took the lead in the season point standing. The first four cars completed 200 laps and for much of the race, to the delight of a sunbathed crowd of more than 100,000, eight cars were in contention.

One of the contenders was Mario Andretti. He had a Roger Penske McLaren in the lead at the start—the drivers' draw for grid positions when rain canceled qualifying—at the halfway mark and after 300 miles. Andretti completed 199 laps and shut off his engine when he heard it give and contented himself with a fifth-place finish.

This was only the third appearance of the Cosworth engine in an Indy car. Unser burned up the track at Phoenix in the season opener, but he also burned up the engine. At Indianapolis, other mechanical problems hit and Unser finished seventh, but he was gaining when rains came and the race was halted after 255 miles.

Charting Employment Service's Course

New York State Employment Service offices in the city. Federal funds subsidize agencies across the country. No fee is charged either employer or job seeker.

By EDWARD COWAN
Special to The New York Times

NEW YORK, June 27 — Prodded by the United States Employment Service, a searching re-examination can best help employers fill and help the unemployed find a job.

Among other things, is whether should continue to be responsible for administering available-for-work jobs and food stamp clients it should try to fill high-skill jobs as well as entry-level positions.

Some $500 million a year in the service pays for and the some 2,400 local employees. No fee is charged to employers.

Employing as a central question, central question, can be posed if the Federal-state service employer find a tax accountant whose depreciating cargo-shipment or a computer programmer understands billing for consulting, will the employer help the jobs for high school dropouts, men and migrant crop pickers moved from farm to town?

Lewis, the 42-year-old public administrator who heads the service, says local job offices must help employers solve their problems to build up the employers' confidence in and willingness to list openings with the service.

"To get new clients," Mr. Lewis says in a reference to companies that list openings, "you've got to be able to handle an employer's high-level recruitment needs. A lot of employers, to test you, will toss you a job they've tried to fill for 90 days. O.K., if he's a guy who employs a thousand people and has a pretty high turnover rate, I'd have someone spend a week trying to find that one highly skilled person he's looking for."

There is another view about the kinds of jobs local employment offices should try to fill. This view has been emerging in Congressional oversight hearings, the second since the service was created by the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933.

"Quit trying to make the Employment Service what it isn't, a professional employment agency," a Wisconsin business executive told a House Government Operations subcommittee in Milwaukee.

"Don't try to compete with private industry in a field which is being successfully handled. Concentrate on doing well

Companies' Charitable Spending Rises

By KOSHEITZ
Special to The New York Times

Corporations spend more on philanthropy this year on philanthropy such as health, arts and culture. Board estimates that contributions rose 10 percent from the year before.

The study, based on the views of 457 major United States corporations, was the work of James F. Harris, director of social responsibility research at the Conference Board, and Anne Klepper, research associate.

Overall, it was found, there is no serious negative stockholder reaction to corporate philanthropy. About 70 percent of the chairmen and presidents questioned said there was "no stockholder reaction." Some 88 percent said, however, that stockholders have "no real influence" over the level of company contributions.

In a few cases where contributions have been challenged by dissident stockholders, the challengers have rarely won as much as 3 percent of the total stockholders' vote. It was noted that institutional investors—including colleges, universities and foundations, many of which would favor corporate contributions—constitute a major proportion of shareholders.

The Conference Board said that major reasons for corporate philanthropy include good corporate citizenship, a belief that public service is necessary for long-term business survival, the need to set examples for others and promotion of a healthy community in which to live and work.

TREASURY REFINES ITS MANAGEMENT OF FEDERAL DEBT

$8.2 Billion Sale This Week of Bills and Notes to Help Lift Average Maturity

By JOHN H. ALLAN
Special to The New York Times

The Treasury is beginning to make some headway in its effort to keep the nation's debt from getting progressively shorter and less easily managed. This week it will sell $8.2 billion of bills and notes that will help offset a decade-long decline in the average life of the debt from five years and four months in June 1966 to two years and five months in March 1976.

This financing is, of course, interesting to the credit markets because the Treasury will auction $2.5 billion of three-month bills and $3.4 billion of six-month bills this afternoon, and it will sell $2.5 billion of five-year notes tomorrow.

Last Friday afternoon three-month bills traded at a 5.28 percent rate and six-month bills at 4.67 percent. Five-year notes yielded 7.50 percent.

This week's financing is also significant because it points up the implementation of the Treasury's debt-management policy of borrowing at the lowest possible cost and promoting stable economic growth.

Policy Described

As Edwin H. Yeo, Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs, explained in an interview Friday, the Government's debt-management policy has several dimensions.

The first, he said, is to raise funds at the lowest cost.

"The minimum long-run cost," he said, "doesn't necessarily mean borrowing in the short end of the market exclusively when we have an upward rising yield curve. Studies we've done show short-run savings can be illusory."

Debt management has an economic aspect, too, he said.

If the record volume of funds borrowed in fiscal 1976, which ends Wednesday, had been borrowed exclusively in the short-term market, the Treasury "would have added to the stock of liquid assets and would have not made a contribution to our long-run goal of economic stabilization," Mr. Yeo said.

Over the last 18 months, the American financial system has been made more liquid to a degree that has perhaps been underestimated, the Treasury official also said. As the economy expands, some of this accumulated liquidity will be spent.

"By avoiding putting a large portion of short-term Treasury financing in there," Mr. Yeo explained, "we reduce the potential for stresses arising from this very natural process."

An operating policy of the Treasury, he said, is to work with the market.

To do that, the Treasury has "regularized" much of its borrowing activities. Today's five-

Big Board Implements Plan to Reward Specialists on Basis of Professionalism

By ROBERT J. COLE
Special to The New York Times

When stockbrokers speak of professionalism on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, a concept that means orderly pricing for the small investor, some of the names that come to mind are Wagner, Stott & Company; M. J. Meehan & Company; Spear, Leeds & Kellogg; Adler, Coleman & Company; Walter N. Frank & Company; Henderson Brothers, Inc.; Phelan, Silver, Vesce, Barry & Company, and Robb, Peck, McCooley & Company.

There are others, but not surprisingly none are exactly household words. All, however, are extremely well-known specialists to the nationally recognized brokerage houses that deal with them on behalf of the small investor.

And from now on—under a change in policy promulgated by the newly named Big Board chairman, William M. Batter—professionalism on the trading floor and a reputation among stockbrokers can mean real rewards.

The reason is that these are the qualities that now determine who will win the exchange's franchise to handle stocks.

Some critics charge that specialists have not used their capital often enough to moderate wide price swings by trading against the trend.

Price changes of 20 percent or more in a single day have prompted criticism from investors and performance studies by the Big Board.

A decline in the number of shareholders in the nation to 25.3 million last year from almost 31 million a decade earlier may be partly attributable to confusion and bewilderment of investors holding a stock that dropped 5 or 10 points at a time—with little or no explanation to justify it.

Professionalism and a good reputation among stockbrokers were deciding factors when, for the first time, a new stock exchange committee used performance ratings to pick Robb, Peck & McCooley to handle the BankAmerica Corporation, a blue-chip stock that has left the over-the-counter market to become listed on the Big Board beginning today. The shares will also be traded on the Midwest and Pacific stock exchanges.

The trading floor specialists, the broker's brokers, the market makers—these have been endowed with an exclusive franchise (so far at least) to deal in one or more stocks. Actually, most specialists have at least 25 or 30.

They have been so endowed by the exchange on the strength of what, until recently, was an ill-defined commitment to "maintain a fair and orderly market" on behalf of other brokers, big or small.

Wagner, Stott, for example, is the Big Board's specialist in Merrill Lynch stock. M. J. Meehan has RCA; Spear, Leeds & Kellogg has J. P. Morgan; Adler, Coleman has Avon; Walter N. Frank has Bethlehem Steel; Henderson Brothers has Ford; Phelan, Silver has Kaiser Aluminum, and Robb, Peck, McCooley has Du Pont.

As recalled by people familiar with the details, it was Robb, Peck, McCooley, for example, that stepped in to handle Occidental Petroleum stock about a decade ago after numerous trading halts and hectic trading activity. The exchange simply wrested the stock away from its traditional specialist, and assigned it to Robb, Peck, McCooley with instructions to watch the stock until it settled down.

About two years later the exchange again turned to Robb, Peck, McCooley for help when similar turmoil afflicted Sohio stock. Robb, Peck, McCooley still handles Sohio. The specialist that used to have it is no longer in operation.

Founded during the Depression as Stevens & Legg, the firm has gone through a number of name changes. In the late 1930's it operated as Walters, Peck & Company. Today

Most Savings and Loan Associations Are U.S.-Insured, but Some Are Not

By LEONARD SLOANE
Special to The New York Times

The recent run on deposits at many savings and loan associations in Mississippi called attention to the question of insurance of the savings or share, as they are sometimes called—accounts at such associations. Americans have deposited more than $300 billion in such financial institutions, which have been created to foster both thrift and home ownership, and are naturally concerned with the safety of these accounts.

While the overwhelming bulk of S. & L.'s are members of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, a Federal Government agency that insures private accounts up to $40,000, many are not. In some states, certain associations are covered by state-authorized insurance plans or by private insurance or have no insurance.

As is the case with commercial banks, there is a dual chartering system for savings and loan associations—with some in the United States chartered by the Federal Government and others by states. However, all of the Federally chartered associations must be members of the F.S.L.I.C., while state-chartered institutions have the option of choosing whether to belong.

With close to 5,000 associations in the country, 4,078 are members of the Federal insurance agency—split just about evenly between those with Federal and state charters—and 806 are not. But even though 17 percent of the nation's associations do not belong to the insurance corporation, 98 percent of the total assets of such institutions are in Federally insured associations.

What's more, although the number of Federally insured associations has dropped slightly in recent years, primarily because of acquisitions of small institutions, the percentage of total assets they hold has remained at more than 96 for the last decade. Their assets have

Tire Retailers Doing Brisk Business Despite Strike

But Suppliers Have Been Increasing Prices Slowly

By STEVEN BAITNER
Special to The New York Times

JERSEY CITY, June 27 — "We're not breaking any records, but we're doing fine," Jim DeLuna, the owner of San-Dee's Firestone, was saying as he stood in the waiting area of his tire store watching his employees roll out new tires to waiting cars.

Today 70,000 rubber workers across the country have been on strike 66 days. But for Mr. DeLuna, surveying a spacious showroom packed with new tires as the heavy summer driving begins, it's been "business as usual."

The major effect of the strike is that "I don't have the quality I'd like but I can still get just about everything I need," commented the youthful entrepreneur, who sported a T-shirt emblazoned with the San-Dee logo.

Judging from a sampling of tire dealers, Mr. DeLuna's experience is not unusual.

"We still have quite a stock," said Ben Guberman of the Cybert Tire Corporation, a Manhattan dealer. "Like everybody else, we stocked up as much as possible before the strike." In addition, one-third of the nation's tire-making capacity remains in operation.

However, Mr. Guberman and most other dealers reported spot shortages, particularly in radial tires for intermediate-size popular cars.

The retailers also say that in a business where discounting is commonplace, their suppliers have been raising prices to take advantage of the narrowing supply. And everyone expects a price increase after the strike ends.

"We expect prices to go up about 15 percent in one or two steps before Nov. 1," said Walter Noyes, president of the Noyes Tire Company in Portland, Me.

So far the gradual increases do not appear to have shown up at retail.

"Our advertising policy hasn't changed since the strike," Mr. DeLuna said. "Right now I'm eating the

CANADA'S DECISION ON LOCKHEED PLAN IS EXPECTED SOON

Aircraft Producer Has Cut Outside Financing Needed to Sell 18 Patrol Planes

CABINET TO DELIBERATE

New Proposal Worked Out by Ottawa Officials and Company's Executives

By RICHARD WITKIN
Special to The New York Times

The Canadian Cabinet is expected to hold what could be a decisive meeting tomorrow on the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation's effort to reinstate a Canadian plan to buy 18 Lockheed antisubmarine patrol planes.

Company sources said over the weekend that, under the latest proposal, outside financing required by Lockheed for the first three years of the program had been slashed from $375 million to only $50 million.

Furthermore, they said, none of this money would have to be provided by the Canadians. Instead, Lockheed's 24 lending banks in this country have agreed to supply the funds.

It was the refusal of the Canadian banks and the Government in Ottawa to provide the $375 million in early financing that caused previous negotiations on the $1 billion program to collapse on May 18.

Negotiations Held

Detailed terms of the new plan slated to be put before the Canadian Cabinet were worked out in Ottawa last week in talks between Lockheed officials and staff members from key Canadian ministries. Headed by the Lockheed team were William R. Wilson, senior vice president, and Robert McKean, the company's treasurer.

The sharp cut in financing was made possible by two main changes, Lockheed sources said.

First, the timetable for the project was allowed to slip one year, so that the 18 planes would be delivered to Canada in 1980 and 1981.

Second, Lockheed proposed to delete some of the highly sophisticated electronics gear and postpone to later years the installation of other electronic items. Nevertheless, it was emphasized there had been no compromise in the planes' essential capability to fulfill missions assigned in accord with Canada's commitments to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Additional Factors

The Canadian Cabinet's deliberations are likely to be complicated by two additional factors. One is the possibility of buying a different version of the basic Lockheed plane that might be considerably cheaper. The other is a revamped proposal from the Boeing Company to sell Canada an antisubmarine version of the familiar Boeing 707 transport.

The designation of the plane that Lockheed has been pushing from the start has been Almost half of the associations that do not have Federal insurance are in four states where insurance systems have been created. Among the stocks sought by Mitchum are Allegheny Ludlum, Archer-Daniels-Midland, Continental Air Lines, Dresser Industries, Munsingwear, and Zenith. TRIAL OF HARRISES

ENTERING 2D WEEK

Still No Jurors as the Case
Slows Over Questioning
on Pretrial Publicity

By MARCIA CHAMBERS
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, June 27—As the trial of William and Emily Harris moves into its second week tomorrow, not one juror has been sworn in the state's kidnapping, assault and robbery case against the two members of the self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army.

Indeed, the prosecutor is yet to take his turn to question the 12 prospective jurors so far placed in the jury box about their views on any subject but pretrial publicity. Nor has either side exercised its 40 peremptory challenges. Peremptories permit lawyers to excuse a juror without explanation.

The reason for the slow pace lies in the nature of the case, the procedures used in trying to find fair jurors and the leeway given the Harrisesses—leeway the defense team thinks is limited—to explore jurors' of the Harrisesses and their co-defendant, Patricia Hearst, who is not on trial with her former S.L.A. comrades.

Candor Sometimes Lacking
There are also hidden realities in the process of selecting a jury that have slowed the Harris trial. Few citizens will concede that they are not qualified to serve. And some citizens may be less than candid in an effort to gain a place on a jury hearing a well-publicized case.

Mr. Harris, who has quarreled with Superior Court Judge Mark Brandler over jury selection procedures, last week reminded the judge of these realities.

"My impression of what I see," he said, "is we have a lot of people that are really dying to get on this jury. Who wants to sit in here and get $5 a day when they could be making a living or doing something else? Here we're right in the middle of the summer, it's 1976. People are making big plans for their vacation and we've got people here dying to sit on this thing."

"I think that what we have here are people trying to get on the jury because maybe, maybe it's something to do. You know, it's a big case. But that is not fair. It is not right for them not to tell the truth, to not talk about their deepest feelings."

Publicity Issue a Problem

Mr. Harris, who is 31 years old, is acting as his own attorney. Arguing outside the presence of the jury, he fought to allow the defense to continue to question 10 potential jurors, with the other potential jurors absent, about the effects of pretrial publicity.

The defense has taken more than one hour on the first two prospective jurors, and Judge Brandler has indicated that he wants to cut the time to 20 minutes for each prospect.

The reason for much of the publicity is the S.L.A.'s kidnapping of Miss Hearst, of the publishing family, her conversion to the group and her recent bank robbery trial, in which she was convicted. Although those associated with this trial say she will not be called as a witness, her relationship with the Harrisesses will be an important factor in the trial.

At issue is just how far Judge Brandler intends to go in dismissing a juror for cause—that is, for bias. Unlike the peremptories, there is no limit on dismissals for cause.

Judge Brandler has said that when the time comes he will be "liberal" in dismissing for cause. Both sides have tried to determine what the judge means by "liberal," particularly since none of the six men and six women who will be in the jury box tomorrow have conceded bias.

The law does not require prospective jurors to be ignorant of the cases they hear, and it does not forbid impaneling a juror who has a preconception of the case.

It requires only that the juror promise to set aside his views and decide the case on the evidence and the judge's instructions on the law. One prospective juror questioned for 11 minutes by the prosecutor last week said he could promise this.

What concerns the defense is that some jurors may not be disclosing views that might affect a vote on the fate of the Harrisesses, who, if convicted, could be sentenced to life in prison terms.

Connecticut Will Phase Out
Its 12 Remaining TB Clinics

HARTFORD (AP)—The State Health Department is preparing to phase out its remaining 12 outpatient tuberculosis clinics by combining them with existing chest clinics where possible.

The process is expected to follow the pattern of the recent integration of the state's Waterbury TB clinic with a chest clinic at St. Mary's Hospital in the same city, Health Commissioner Douglas S. Lloyd said.

The 12 remaining state outpatient clinics are in Bristol, Danbury, Fairfield, Hartford, Manchester, Meriden, Middletown, New London, Norwalk, Stamford, Torrington and Wilimantic.

The state plans to transfer them to hospital or local clinic control, the Commissioner said.

This week in Newsweek, Henry Kissinger tells you what's right with America. And a Supreme Court justice tells you what's wrong. George Zervas, a Greek immigrant who sells flowers outside a supermarket in Chicago, says why he's glad he came here. And Jack Colhoun, army deserter now living in Canada, says why he left.

The 19-year old mayor of Liberty Center, Ohio, sounds off on government. And a teacher in Pikesville, Maryland, explains why she wouldn't trade places with Liz Taylor for anything.

It's Newsweek's altogether fascinating look at America—at 200. For this special issue nearly 50 Americans were interviewed by Newsweek reporters across the nation—not a scientific sample, but a kind of American chorus, telling it like it is.

As 19,000,000 readers would expect, Newsweek's treatment of the Bicentennial is lively, rewarding—and unique. Just as the magazine is, issue after issue. No wonder, year after year, Newsweek continues to attract more advertising pages than any other newsweekly.

The Major Events of the Day
International
President Ford and six other leaders of industrial democracies announced yesterday that they had agreed to pursue the objective of sustained economic growth with policies that seek to avoid reigniting worldwide inflation. They pledged this in a joint statement at the end of their economic summit meeting in Puerto Rico. [Page 1, Column 8.]
Palestinian extremists who had seized an Air France plane allowed its 256 passengers and crew members to get off the plane at the Entebbe airport in Uganda, but kept them in custody. The plane was hijacked Sunday after it left Athens for Paris on a flight that originated in Israel. About 88 Israelis and at least nine Americans were aboard. [1:5.]
A court in Angola sentenced an American and three Britons to be shot by a firing squad for their part as mercenaries in the Angolan civil war. One of the Britons had admitted ordering the execution of 14 other British mercenaries who had refused to fight. Two other Americans and seven other British subjects were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 16 to 30 years. The death sentences must be confirmed by President Agostinho Neto. In Washington, the State Department said the death sentence for the American, Daniel Gearhart, was "unwarranted by the facts as we understand them." [1:6.]
National
Government officials said that the Internal Revenue Service had revoked the tax-exempt status of the taxpayer union's $1.4-billion Central States Pension Fund, the largest such fund in the union, citing mismanagement and questionable loan practices. The revocation is retroactive to Jan. 31, 1965, and if it survives an expected court challenge, the fund would be liable for taxes on its earnings of dollars. [1:1.]
Ruling in a Pasadena, Calif., school case, the Supreme Court defined a new limit on the scope of the power of the courts to issue desegregation orders meant to bring about what is called a "unitary" school system that desegregates blacks from whites. In a 5-to-2 opinion, the Court said that even if school authorities have not yet complied with all

Fund-Short Clinics May Ask a Donation For Swine Flu Shot

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28 (AP) — Public health officials who will administer the swine flu vaccine say they need more Federal help and may ask for voluntary donations from the public to pay for the nationwide immunization program.
Dr. J. Brett Lazar, president of the National Association of County Health Officials, said public health doctors throughout the country seemed to support the program but were concerned about the cost in manpower and money.
County officials estimate that Federal grants will pay one-sixth of the cost to local governments. The Federal Government is paying for the vaccine.
County officials, meeting as part of the annual convention of the National Association of Counties, also said they feared liability problems similar to those faced by the vaccine's manufacturers. A convention committee passed a resolution requesting that county and state governments receive a Federal guarantee against loss similar to the liability insurance sought by vaccine manufacturers.
The resolution, while supporting the mass immunization program, also appealed to the Federal Government for full reimbursement of the cost of administering it.
Dr. Lazar, a Hoard County, Md., health officer, said in an interview that public health clinics might decide to ask for donations. He said that in Maryland the cost to the counties of administering the vaccine had been estimated at 60 cents a shot.
Federal law prevents charging an administrative fee. "If those, who can afford it give $1 or $2, it will pay for those who cannot," he said, adding that some counties will likely ask for donations.

Correction

A chart in The Times last Friday, based on a Times/CBS News poll, gave an incorrect figure for Jimmy Carter in a hypothetical race against President Ford in the Western states. Mr. Carter's support was 44 percent, not 40, to 36 percent for Mr. Ford.

SENATE APPROVES SOME TAX REFORM

Advantages for Those With High Investment Income Are Cut From Bill

By EILEEN SHANAHAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 28—Tax reform advocates won a lopsided victory today when the Senate voted, 66 to 17, to remove from the tax bill a provision that would have conferred new tax advantages on persons with large amounts of income from investments.

The Senate also acted today to head off the problems that would arise if, as expected, July 1 arrives without Congress having acted to extend the 1975 antinestor tax cuts, which go off the statute books on that date.

With about two minutes of discussion and no roll-call vote, the Senate approved a motion by Senator Russell B. Long of Louisiana, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, to keep present withholding taxes unchanged until Sept. 1, even if the tax cuts temporarily expire.

Time-Seeking Move
The move was intended to give Congress time to work on the tax measure the Senate is considering, which includes sections that would make most of the 1975 tax cuts permanent and would extend the others through the middle of next year.

The extension of withholding taxes was voted as an amendment to a motion to extend the Senate is considering that has already passed the House of Representatives. Thus the measure can be returned to the House immediately for its concurrence on the amendment and can go to President Ford for his signature before July 1.

The provision of the big tax bill that the reformers succeeded in removing would have reduced the maximum tax rate to 50 percent from the present level of 70 percent on investment income that did not exceed $100,000 yearly, providing also that it did not exceed the amount of income that the same person had earned from his or her job in the same year.

In other words, an executive or professional person with a salary or business income of $100,000 could also have investment income of $100,000 and none of it would have been taxed at a rate higher than 50 percent.

The 50 percent maximum tax rate applies now to earned income—salaries, commissions and professional fees.

The provision constituted the broadest new tax preference in the bill.

Businesses in New York Over 200 Years Honored

A number of New York businesses and organizations were honored last night for having been in the city for more than 200 years.

"Manufacturers want a single floor and top-heavy Manhattan does not lend itself to this," Dr. Murphy added.

"We have so many other problems. It is not the corporations that are taxed heavily here, it is the individual person. And that is why companies have moved out—because their employees were dissatisfied," Dr. Murphy added.

"There are, however, some specialized businesses that would never be expected to leave New York. The Caswell-Massey Company Ltd., the pharmacy at 518 Lexington Avenue, indicated it would never quit the city."

"We've been aristocrats for more than 200 years and New York is the only place left where our kind of people come," said Ralph Taylor, the company president.

"We have resisted the commercial and we are an oasis of quiet contentment. We try to help New York by remaining the way we are. And that takes an effort."

At Caswell-Massey, which opened in Newport, R. I., in 1752 and has been in the city since 1868, the specialties include rare imported soaps and perfumes.

"We just had a burglary this morning and my brother said that if they come back, we should give them a catalogue," said Mr. Taylor.

The Marine Society of New York was also honored. But it moved its home for women and children to 230 P.M. at Sallier's Snug Harbor, from Staten Island to North Carolina last week.

"It cost us $250 a week for a cook here and it is only $80 a week for our cook in North Carolina," said Capt. Adrian Spidle.

"If they would only clear out the rubble from the South Bronx and make it into an industrial park, it would help," he said.

"We have so many other problems. It is not the corporations that are taxed heavily here, it is the individual person. And that is why companies have moved out—because their employees were dissatisfied," Dr. Murphy added.

Dr. Paul Pimsleur, 48, Dies in France

Designed and Programmed the Language Lab

Dr. Paul Pimsleur, a professor of education and romance languages at the State University of Albany and an author, died last Tuesday of a heart attack in Paris where he was a visiting professor at the Sorbonne. He was 48 years old.

Dr. Pimsleur, a native of New York City and a graduate of City College of New York, who earned his doctorate at Columbia University, was credited with designing and programming what was termed the nation's first computerized language laboratory, called The Language Lab, and later, The Listening Center, at Ohio State University in Columbus.

He worked in conjunction with the Ohio Bell Telephone Company, and the system enabled students to learn at their own pace by dialing in directly on pre-programmed tapes. Dr. Pimsleur directed the laboratory from 1960 to 1970.

He wrote several books on education and was called a pioneer in the rapid teaching of language and in testing methods. His standardized examinations for foreign-language aptitude and achievement, published by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc. and known as the Pimsleur Tests, are widely used in the United States. Dr. Pimsleur was a Fulbright professor in Heidelberg, Germany, in 1968 and 1969.

He is survived by his wife, the former Beverly Fleischman, a former lecturer in the division of comparative literature at Ohio University and an educational film maker; a son, Marc-Andrew, a designer; Julia, his mother; Meira G. Pimsleur of New York, retired director of acquisitions at Columbia Law School, and an author, and a brother, Joel, of San Francisco, a reporter for The San Francisco Chronicle.

A memorial service will be held at 1:30 P.M. tomorrow in St. Paul's Chapel at Columbia University.

Prince Radziwill Dead at 62; Ex-Husband of Lee Bouvier

LONDON, June 28 (AP)—Prince Stanislas Radziwill, former husband of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis' younger sister, Lee Bouvier, died yesterday at the home of a friend, sources close to the family reported today. He was 62 years old.

There was no official announcement and details could not be obtained immediately.

The sources said that the Prince, a naturalized British subject who claimed descent from Polish kings, died of a heart attack while a guest at a house in Essex, northeast of London.

Prince Radziwill's three marriages all ended in divorce. He and Lee Bouvier were married March 18, 1958. They had two children, Anthony Stanislas and Anna Christian, whose godfather was the late President John F. Kennedy.

Lee Bouvier had moved to London in 1953 as the wife of Michael T. Canfield, secretary to the United States Ambassador, Winthrop Aldrich. She obtained a civil divorce from Mr. Canfield in 1958.

She and Prince Radziwill were married in a ceremony before a county clerk in Fairfax, Va. Mindful that the Roman Catholic Church, to which she belongs, would not recognize her new marriage, she obtained an annulment of her marriage to Mr. Canfield from the Vatican in November 1962. That meant she could have a church wedding with Prince Radziwill.

The Prince arrived in London after World War II. He was considered an astute businessman, and was reputed to have done well in the London real-estate business.

He obtained a divorce on July 23, 1974, on the ground that he and his wife had not lived together for the previous two years and that the marriage had irretrievably broken down.

HUSSEIN COMPLETES TALKS IN MOSCOW

MOSCOW, June 28 (Reuters)—Jordan and the Soviet Union today called for an end to the civil war in Lebanon after earlier indications that the two countries had disagreed on the role of Syria in the Lebanese conflict.

The appeal came in a communiqué issued after a 12-day visit here by Jordan's King Hussein, making his first trip to Moscow in five years. The King flew home earlier today.

"The sides are deeply concerned about the tragic events in Lebanon," the communiqué said, "and urge the speedy stoppage of bloodshed, and insurance of Lebanon's integrity, independence and sovereignty."

The joint call appeared to resolve a confrontation at an official dinner here on June 18, when King Hussein strongly defended Syria's intervention in Lebanon and President Nikolai V. Podgorny implicitly criticized it.

As expected, there was no mention in the final document of a possible Jordanian purchase of a Soviet anti-aircraft missile system, which King Hussein had said he would discuss with Soviet leaders during the visit.

Senate Approves Atlantic City Casinos

By New York Times Staff

Old Eagles Begin DDT Test

By New York Times Staff
 June 28 — Two bald eagles were taken to a new home in New York State today as part of a conservation program to see if they can survive in the wild. The eagles were taken from Ontario, Canada, where they had been living in a nest on a power line.

them East, the State Department of Environmental Conservation and Cornell University. The cost is estimated at $10,000, with Albany and Washington sharing it, while Cornell provides the transportation.

But the program has at least one critic among wildlife specialists who has raised the question of priorities, whether the environment is getting cleaner and whether the available money could be better spent in combating pollution and improving the habitat for endangered fish, birds and other animals.

Dr. Cade and one of his assistants, James Weaver, who helped create them. "They were rather docile, covering, as a matter of fact, which is normal for the strange conditions," Dr. Cade said. "They freeze if disturbed, if a predator flies over, and remain as motionless as possible. When they get older, there's a rapid transition. They become belligerent and aggressive."

One problem is that the birds are a little older than Dr. Cade had expected. At about 11 weeks of age, young eagles are ready to fly off to seek their own food, but the professor was afraid that in the new site the birds might become frightened and fly off prematurely and then be not strong enough or oriented enough to fly back to the nest.

Eagles settling down in their new home, a 35-foot platform, south of Lake Ontario.

Dr. Cade has decided that New York State is the best likely place where bald eagles are likely to have success because of the industrial, agricultural and domestic pollutants. Dr. Cade commented: "He may very well be right, but on the other hand he may be wrong." The DDT levels in carp, a favorite food for the bald eagle, Dr. Cade said, are less than half of what they once were.

The Cornell professor and several assistants went to an airport in central New York State yesterday afternoon to receive the birds, which had been crated and transported in a baggage compartment. They drove them to their new home in Albany, Peter B. Moyle, Commissioner of Conservation, said. The immature birds were taken to New York State about 10 weeks old, covered with sepia-brown to black feathers and "not very spectacular looking," Dr. Cade said. He added, however, that they were in excellent condition. In their new home, the birds squatted and used to avoid Dr.

Volunteers Are Sought For Youth Programs

The Citizens Committee for New York City yesterday called for 1,000 volunteers to help staff small and large summer youth programs throughout the city, including sports, recreation, arts and crafts, music and dance programs.

The committee's executive director, Dennis Allen, said that cutbacks in public funds and summer jobs would leave more than the usual number of youths with little to do this summer unless volunteers came forward to work with them.

The volunteer program of the committee was started in cooperation with the Mayor's Voluntary Action Center. New Yorkers wishing to take part in it were asked to call 566-5854.

Helping New York 'Village' Youth Project: Learning Artisan Skills

By BARBARA CAMPBELL
 Some teen-agers in the West and East Village spend their free time hanging out in local parks and playgrounds. They have "very little structured activity and little guidance," according to a West Village artist, William Leicht.

Mr. Leicht and a small group of volunteers think some of that idle time could be better spent in an artisans' training program. Sitting in his large studio at Westbeth, the artists' housing complex on Bank and West Streets, Mr. Leicht said that he had been working since March to set up a program to involve youths in the city in what he calls environmental art.

What he came up with was a program called Urban Youth/Environment, which he managed to get financed.

If you want to volunteer to take part in the training program or volunteer to offer adult expertise, call William Leicht, Visions, 989-6596, or Peter Shalleck, managing director, Westbeth, 691-1500.

by New York City and by the Kaplan Fund. The project hopes to offer an opportunity for teen-agers interested in learning such skills as carpentry, concrete construction and masonry, and it is still looking for adult volunteers to teach these skills.

Mr. Leicht was able to obtain city antipollution funds to pay a weekly stipend to 40 young people, although he was restricted in choosing the teen-agers, he said, by the city antipollution guidelines on family income.

The 40 teen-agers who qualified were chosen from applicants who heard about the program from their high school art departments. Ten other teen-agers whose families are not at the poverty level, and who therefore could not receive the stipend, volunteered anyway.

The majority of the young people chosen for the eight-week program, which begins July 6, come from lower Manhattan, Mr. Leicht said.

However, Mr. Leicht says he wants local teen-agers who did not qualify for the stipend to volunteer for the project, which will include designing an entrance to Pier 49 at Bank Street, constructing it in ferroconcrete and decorating it, and designing and building a decorative wall for a playground on East Ninth Street at Avenue C.

When actual construction begins, he says, "We'll need hands." Mr. Leicht says he will need as many young people as he can get between July 12 and 20 to work at the Bank Street pier and between July 20 and Aug. 16 on East Ninth Street.

Mr. Leicht and Peter Shalleck, the managing director of Westbeth, are concerned about what they believe is an erroneous assumption by some West Village residents that local young people who congregate together are members of "gangs."

"Some of the kids do need adult guidance and something to do, but they are not bad kids," said Mr. Shalleck, who was instrumental in getting the Kaplan Fund Inc. to give $5,000 for the program.

Helping construct the free-standing sculptured wall and the gateway to the pier, Mr. Shalleck said, will "give these kids tangible evidence of what constructive channeling of their energies can do."

Mr. Leicht said the initial work would be done at his 6,000-square-foot studio, which is equipped with tools. Some of the young people involved in the program will design the models. Others will work with carpenters to build the designs, with technicians to apply the ferroconcrete and with graphic artists to paint the structures.

Mr. Shalleck says he has come up with a way to finance the program—the city money and the grant money only cover salaries of $45 and $55 a week for the 40 trainees—by selling spaces on top of Westbeth to view Operation Sail on the Fourth of July. The roof of the 12-story building provides a view of the Hudson River for miles in both directions. The tickets, he says, are $40, and that includes food. The money is tax-deductible, he says.

Bridge Flag Falls Victim To the Wind

What was billed as the world's largest flag, a red, white and blue expanse of nylon taffeta sailcloth the size of a football field and a half, ripped apart yesterday in a trial test.

The flag was to have hung from the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge for the July 4 gatherings of ships in New York Harbor. "It's a sad story, but it's beyond repair," said Nicholas Patsis, an administrative engineer for the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, after he and a crew of workmen spent about eight futile hours trying to salvage the huge American flag.

"The stars are still up, but the stripes are down," Mr. Patsis said.

With shreds of the flag flapping over the bridge, the upper level of the eastbound lane was closed for several hours as workmen tried to reel it in.

The flag that was to have hung about 250 feet above the water on a 30-inch-wide steel truss was gently lowered starting at 10:30 A.M. when the wind velocity was six miles an hour, the engineer said.

As the flag was lowered, the wind velocity increased to 12 and then 16 miles an hour, causing the flag to press against the steel framework of the bridge. With the wind pressing against the flag, the horizontal stitching on the end of the flag nearest to Brooklyn began to separate.

"Then all hell broke loose," said the engineer. "The seams on the other side started coming apart and we couldn't budge the flag one way or another."

Couple Found Guilty in Rifle Case
 A jury in Federal court in Brooklyn found a Brooklyn couple guilty of illegally transporting rifles from California to New York. The couple, Kenneth R. Chin, 29 years old, and his wife, Elizabeth, 33, of 925 Union Street, were arrested last October after a raid on their apartment by Federal agents who suspected a plot to assassinate Emperor Hirohito, who was visiting the United States.

High Court to Hear Port Unit's Case
 The Supreme Court of the United States agreed to hear an appeal by Port Authority of New York and New Jersey bondholders attempting to stop the Port Authority from using bond money to finance rapid transit to Newark and Kennedy International Airports. The appeal by the United States Trust Company on behalf of the bondholders will be argued next term. New York and New Jersey authorized the Port Authority to issue bonds in 1962 for the purchase of the Hudson-Manhattan Railroad (now PATH) and for the construction of the World Trade Center Towers.

Ex-Policeman Guilty in Fraud Case
 A jury in Federal court in Manhattan found Robert Ercoli, 44 years old, of Elmford, former lieutenant in charge of the Traffic Division of the Town of Greenburgh police in Westchester County, guilty of conspiring to defraud the Federal Government by distributing moonlighting work among members of the town's police force and paying for it so that his fellow officers would not have to pay income taxes on it.

The jury was unable to reach a verdict on whether Ralph M. Purdy, 41, of White Plains, a detective sergeant who was formerly president of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, was guilty of making false statements to a grand jury investigating the tax evasion and the case was dismissed.

From the Police Blotter:
 The nude body of a 20-year-old Brooklyn woman was found on the beach at Coney Island near an ice skating rink at West 20th Street. The victim was identified as Valerie Golden of 3415 Neptune Avenue. She apparently had been strangled and raped. Her clothes and purse were found near her body. . . . A 21-year-old Brooklyn man was found shot to death on the sidewalk in front of 2378 East Fourth Street in the Gravesend section. He was identified as Edward F. Moore of 2916 86th Street. He had been shot in the chest. The motive for the shooting was unknown.

TALL SHIPS ARE DEEP SHIPS, TOO: Dredging operations were begun at the South Street Seaport Museum pier yesterday to ready the facility for the berthing of several of the large square-rigger ships that will participate in Operation Sail. Army engineers decided to make the slips deeper so the ships wouldn't get stuck in the mud.

Announce Police in the Death of a Black Man in New Cassel

By New York Times Staff
 June 28 — Black residents from Westbury and Westbury today announced that they were protesting the police in the death of a black man in New Cassel. The man, Daniel Hines, was shot by two police officers while he was talking to some friends. They said he then ran down an alley and about 10 shots were fired at the victim by the two policemen as well as by Police Officer Stephen Schochet, who was passing by.

Although the police say they have affidavits from two witnesses stating they had seen Mr. Cowan with a gun, a four-hour search by the police that night and the next morning failed to produce the weapon. Officer Schochet said he thought that Mr. Cowan had a gun and was going to shoot. Daniel Guido, the Nassau County Police Commissioner, met with leaders of the black community two days later at Police Headquarters here to explain the police action, which he called "reasonable in the circumstances and within the law." But the black residents remained angry.

Today, protesting marchers, who filled the board room to overflowing, carried signs saying, "We want justice," and "Stop police brutality."

The officers involved in the shooting, have been transferred to other posts, and an investigation of the incident was started this morning by a Nassau County grand jury.

The Rev. Daniel Hines called the shooting a "murder" and added, "The time has come for us to look out for one another." The Rev. Granville Burnett, asserting that 11 shots had been fired, accused the police of "overreacting." He added: "We feel if you don't overreact when a white person is in front of you, you shouldn't overreact when a black person is in front of you."

Lorenzo Merritt of Westbury told the Supervisors that the marchers had walked to "the seat of government out of a sense of deep remorse and anger." He added, "Too often in our community we have been shot at and brutalized."

Mr. Merritt contended that the same attitudes that pervade Rhodesia and South Africa pervade Nassau County itself.

Supervisors for an emergency meeting were called by Larry W. Schuchman, Westbury's mayor, to meet at 10:15 p.m. at the Westbury Police Station. The meeting was attended by about 100 people, including many black residents. The meeting was held in a room that had been reserved for a meeting of the board of supervisors.

Rookie Hurts 7-Hitter for 8-1 Record

By THOMAS ROGERS

DETROIT, June 28—The New York Yankees, nine games ahead in the American League East and sporting a five-game winning streak, began a seven-game road trip tonight against the Tigers in the opener of a three-game series.

But the team's winning streak as well as Mickey Rivers' 20-game hitting streak ended as the Yankees were set down, 5-1, by the blazing fastball of Mark Fidrych. The Detroit rookie allowed only seven hits while winning his eighth game against one loss. He was backed by homers by Rusty Staub and Aurelio Rodriguez. A crowd of 47,85 and a national television audience saw the lanky Tiger pitcher cool the Yankee bats, which had produced 24 hits in a doubleheader sweep, yesterday in New York. For the surging Indians, it was the 13th victory in their last 19 games. After spotting the Brewers a 2-0 lead in the first, Cleveland came back Lowenstein's first homer of the season. Don Money's run-scoring triple chased the Indian starter, Don Hood, and brought on Bibby. The big right-hander gave up only a leadoff single in the third to Henry Aaron and a two-out single to George Scott in the

I'm just putting the best nine offensive players on the field. It doesn't necessarily mean it will be the same next week. It was the first relief appearance since 1970 for Jenkins, he got into the mood of things by striking out eight men to

Soviet Woman Sets 1,500 Mark of 3:56

MOSCOW, June 28 (Reuters)—Tatyana Kazankina of the Soviet Union became the first woman to break the four-minute barrier for the 1,500-meter run today. She ran the metric mile in 3 minutes 56 seconds in a pre-Olympic competition. Her time cut more than five seconds off the listed world mark of 4:01.4 set by her compatriot, Ludmila Bragina, at the 1972 Olympics in Munich. Raisa Katuykova, second in today's race, also beat the previous world record by clocking 3:59.8. Miss Bragina finished third in 4:02.6.

U.S. Coach: Track Team Very Strong

By FRANK LITSKY Special to The New York Times EUGENE, Ore., June 28—Let's say you are the coach of the United States men's Olympic track team. How would you like to go to the Montreal Olympics next month with a team that includes such world record-holders as Steve Williams, Dan Ripley, Terry Adirton and Jim Bolting; such 1972 Olympic medalists as Tom Hill and Ralph Mann; such present and past national champions as Marty Liquori, Reggie Jones, Maurice Peoples, Tom McLean, Randy Smith and Tom Woods, and a Pan American Games champion and Ronnie Ray? If you are Dr. Leroy Walker, coach of the American men at Montreal, you already have reconciled yourself to their absence. For all those athletes, almost everyone a potential Olympic medalist, failed to qualify for the United States team in nine-day trials that ended yesterday. Some were hurt and some performed poorly. It was so or die because, as American Olympic officials like to say, the team picked itself. The first three men and first three women in most events made the team. "The men's team is very strong, very capable," said Walker. "There are some very pleasant surprises. If we are up to maximum performance, we will come off very well. How many gold medals? "It's difficult to say," said Walker. "When you get to the finals, there are such fine

Run in Eighth Tops Cards at Shea

By MURRAY CHASS

Overcoming a late St. Louis Rally and freakish windstorm, the Mets gained their fifth straight victory last night, edging the Cardinals, 5-4, on the bounce of a baseball. Al Hrabosky, the Mad Huns-fans and enraged others, threw the bouncing ball and Ted Simmons couldn't follow it well enough. It became a wild pitch and it gave the Mets the winning run in the eighth inning.

The Cardinals and the windstorm struck suddenly, at about the same time. But John Milner led off the eighth with a single but was out trying to steal second. Dave Kingman who earlier hit his 25th home run, followed with a single and Hrabosky relieved Bill Greif. Joe Torre batted for Ed Kranepool and singled Kingman to third, Mike Vail batted for Del Unser but struck out. That brought up Wayne Garrett, and Hrabosky bounced the first pitch in the dirt and it scooted between Simmons' legs to the back-stop. Kingman romped home and all that was left was for Bob Apodaca to retire three Cardinals in the ninth inning.

The Cardinals overcame the Mets' 4-1 lead with a sudden late-inning effort. Neither did Lockwood Tom Seaver had been cruising with seeming certainty toward his ninth victory, allowing just two hits in six innings. However, Lou Brock opened the seventh with a bloop single to left and Ted Simmons and Willie Crawford followed with line-singles that brought Brock home. Ron Fairly then rapped a one-bouncer to first, which Ed Kranepool fielded cleanly but which Seaver didn't catch cleanly when Kranepool threw it to him at first. That gave St. Louis its third run of the game and runners at first and third with no one out.

That also gave the manager, Joe Frazier, reason to remove Seaver and bring in Skip Lockwood. As Lockwood entered the game, a windstorm suddenly invaded the hot, muggy evening and whipped dirt and papers around the field. It was a bizarre scene as flying dirt enveloped the players and papers flew out of the stands behind first base and swirled their way onto the grass in the left-field corner. The windstorm didn't ease up the rest of the inning and neither did Lockwood. Throwing only 12 pitches, he struck out Hector Cruz, Mike Tyson and Jerry Mumphrey in lightning-like order and the Mets emerged from the inning with a shaky one-run lead. Minutes later, the lead evaporated altogether as Lockwood failed to match his initial effort. With one out in the eighth, Don Kessinger walked and with two out, Simmons sin-

Port Fall and Rise Cited

By New York Times
LONDON, June 28—A drop in the volume of exports and a pickup in imports in May brought the trade balance in May into a surplus for the first time since the recession began in January.

The trade balance in May was $386 million, compared with a deficit of $671 million in April. Exports were down 24 percent from April. This cut the dollar value of oil imports by $650 million. Meanwhile, exports may have begun to reflect the strong recovery in the economies of the other industrial countries. They rose in May to a record $9.55 billion, up from $9.29 billion in April and above the previous peak of $9.41 billion last November.

"Such problems have created uncertainty about the viability of many projects," Mr. Grossman said, "and it is likely that even more of the utilities will keep their options open and postpone appropriations."

Appropriations by the electric utilities, according to the report, were $4.3 billion, down 69 percent from $14.5 billion in 1975's first quarter.

Natural gas utilities announced appropriations of $470 million, a 35 percent drop from the $724 million in the 1975 first quarter.

House Bars Ban on SST At Kennedy and at Dulles

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 28—By a vote of 269 to 125, the House of Representatives today defeated a bill that would have barred the Concorde from all United States airports, and a similar follow-up amendment offered by Representative Edward I. Koch, Democrat of Manhattan, would have barred the Concorde only from Kennedy International Airport in New York City. It was defeated, 228 to 170.

After the anti-Concorde amendments were defeated, the bill, which provides funds to operate the Department of Transportation and its related agencies for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, was passed by the House and sent to the Senate. The vote was 378 to 21.

The sharpest exchanges of the debate dealt more with New York City than with the Concorde.

At one point, Representative Silvio O. Conte, Republican of Massachusetts, observed that representatives from New York City and its suburbs were in the vanguard of the SST opponents even though the Concorde was not landing there. Mr. Conte said he "loved" New York but called it "the dirtiest city, the filthiest city."

When Representative Lester L. Wolfe, Democrat of Maryland, County, tried to reply that Mr. Conte's home city of Pitsfield was not "immaculate," Mr. Conte shot back: "Why don't you clean up your own city and leave Dulles alone."

the Henry Hudson, Throgs Neck, Bronx-Whitestone, Triborough, Verrazano-Narrows, Marine Park and Cross Bay-Veterans Memorial Bridges.

Triborough officials said last night that they intended to seek an injunction against the strike, but the walkout—the first by Triborough officers since a three-day strike in 1970—was expected to continue today.

Authority officials said that temporary and supervisory personnel would again be stationed in as many nonautomated booths as possible and that "honor system" barrels would be placed in unmanned booths.

The walkout last night in violation of the state's Taylor Law, which forbids strikes by public employees, was the latest move in a long-standing dispute between the authority and its 650 officers over the question of carrying guns on duty.

Since last year, the officers have had full peace-officer status under state law and are thus entitled to own and carry service revolvers. Despite this, the authority has refused to alter its rule forbidding the men to take guns to work.

On Friday, the officers' union put the question again to Triborough officials in a labor-management meeting and was refused. The union, which cited a variety of purported on-the-job dangers and a shooting incident last week in the Triborough Battery Tunnel, then directed its members to wear their guns.

Over the weekend, several hundred officers carried their guns to work despite warnings from the authority of disciplinary charges carrying possible fines, suspension or even dismissal.

Late yesterday afternoon, 29 officers—a group said by an authority spokesman to have led the gun-carrying action Friday—were notified that disciplinary charges had been filed against them. Hearings were set for early next month.

The walkout began shortly after letter bearing the notification were handed to the officers. "It started out as a wildcat, but as we heard about it we started calling the men out," said Anthony Mauro, the union president.

Mr. Mauro declared that the officers would not return to work unless the authority removed its weapons ban, and added: "This may be a long strike because management is just as adamant as we are over the issue."

Canadian Airline Pilots' Strike Ended

OTTAWA, June 28—Airlines resumed flights in Canada today as Canadian pilots ended a nine-day walkout following a Government announcement that the question of extending the use of the French language at Quebec airports would be re-examined and ultimately submitted to Parliament.

Pilots and air traffic controllers objected to the plan, and Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau declared last week that the animosities stirred by the language dispute had created a serious threat to national unity. If unchecked, he said, the debate could cause the French-speaking Province of Quebec to leave the confederation.

Transport Minister Otto Lang, announcing the new agreement with the pilots and controllers at a news conference, said that the Government would allow an unusual free vote in Parliament on the final decision concerning the language to be used by airport control towers.

Panel to Be Enlarged

This means that it will refrain from adoption of Cabinet policy and will allow members to vote according to their personal views. The governing Liberal Party has 140 members in the 264-seat House of Commons.

Mr. Lang said that a third judge, D. W. Heald of the Federal Court, would be added to the judicial panel previously named to study questions of language. Under the same law, intended to preserve French culture in Quebec, only the children of English-speaking parents, or immigrant children who pass an English language test, are permitted to attend English-language public schools.

The pilots, citing the adoption of English as the official language of international air service many years ago, contend that it is a retrograde step for Canada to reintroduce French, even though many other countries also use a local language in addition to English their control towers.

Justice, Julien Chouard of the Quebec Superior Court.

The Transport Minister repeated the Government's earlier assurances that safety considerations would be given priority over the official policy of promoting bilingualism. In carrying out this policy, the Government has authorized the use of French, the language of 27 percent of Canadians, in addition to English in functions of the federal administration.

Mr. Lang said that the three-man commission's report would have to be unanimous to provide a valid guide for the Government. "Unless the commissioners all agree that the practice to be adopted will be consistent with our standards of safety, we will not proceed," he declared.

Kenneth Maley, president of the Canadian Airline Pilots Association, said at a news conference that the pilots were still opposed to the use of two languages but had agreed to participate in the commission's study.

At issue is the Government's proposal to extend the use of French, already permitted in the control towers of five small Quebec airports, to others. These would include the two big airports, Montreal and Ottawa International Airport, which also serves the nearby Quebec City of Roule.

French is the official language of Quebec Province by legislation. Under the same law, intended to preserve French culture in Quebec, only the children of English-speaking parents, or immigrant children who pass an English language test, are permitted to attend English-language public schools.

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

Variably cloudy skies and warm and humid conditions with some moderate showers and occasional thunderstorms may occur from New England and the lake region to the eastern Gulf Coast. Additional precipitation will be limited to scattered showers along the coast of the Pacific Northwest. It will be mid across the Ohio Valley, upper Mississippi Valley and upper lake region; warm or hot weather will prevail elsewhere. Fair skies should cover the rest of the country.

Sunny weather continued yesterday over most of the Northeast and Middle Atlantic States; some clouds moved into New England, the lake region and Southeast. Intense thunderstorms developed over Missouri and Kansas while moderate showers and thundershowers occurred throughout the remainder of the Midwest; showers were also scattered under low clouds from the Carolinas to Louisiana. Warm and humid conditions continued throughout the eastern third of the country, while moderate showers and thundershowers also dominated most of the southern two-thirds of the country. Except for the Central Plains States, it was clear from the Mississippi Valley to the Pacific Coast.

Figures beside Station Circle temperature.

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air under which the colder air pushes the warmer air usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and cooler air over which the warmer air is forced to rise and advance usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which the warm air is forced to rise and is overtaken by the cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate afternoon maximum temperatures.

Dashed lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines of equal barometric pressure (in inches). Formations of high and low pressure systems.

Winds are counter-clockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

New Message From Balloonist Raises Hopes of His Associates

By PETER KRASS

Two factors—one positive, one negative—kept associates of a 27-year-old balloonist from Troy, Mich., hopeful yesterday that he was successfully continuing his solo flight to Europe.

The balloonist, Karl Thomas, started out from Lakehurst Naval Air Station in New Jersey last Friday night.

The positive was a radio broadcast in which he gave his name and flight identification number at about 10:30 P.M. Sunday. The broadcast was heard by Atlanta-based Pan American World Airways pilots south of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, although they were unable to engage Mr. Thomas in two-way conversation.

The negative element was that nobody had picked up any distress signals. The balloonist was equipped with two beeper radios supposed to go on automatically if it were forced to ditch.

None having been heard, the Federal Aviation Administration in Washington and the Coast Guard here had simply asked aircraft and ships to be on the lookout for the balloonist.

Last night, Wallace Clayton, one associate, said that Mr. Thomas had cast off ballast when he encountered storms on Saturday and was probably in or above clouds that would make it hard for ships to sight him. At an altitude of 5,000 or 6,000 feet, he might similarly be difficult to spot from airplanes traveling at 37,000 feet, Mr. Clayton said.

The helium-filled balloon—90 feet high from gondola to tip—must go wherever the wind goes. So while Mr. Thomas had set his target as Paris, he himself had acknowledged that he had a thousand miles away.

He has been backed by a 27-member committee of business and professional men who have raised $100,000 so far "just to help achieve something because it never has been done before," according to Mr. Thomas. The balloonist operates the Flight Bishop Airport in Michigan and heads an aircraft maintenance company there.

The 14 by 7½-foot gondola had been equipped with five radio systems. But shortly after the lift-off from Lakehurst at 9:02 P.M. Friday, an antenna appeared to have failed, so that direct contact through a high-frequency, long-range radio system also went out.

The radio was designed to operate over a range of 4,000 miles to keep Mr. Thomas in touch with his communications center—which is operating out of the apartment of Bob Temmerman at 425 East 58th Street—and Paul Johnson, his flight director, who initially stayed at Lakehurst. Both are steel company executives.

With his other radios, Mr. Thomas was broadcasting every 15 minutes on Saturday to conserve power and to let everyone know he is fine," Mr. Johnson said.

For about an hour around 4 A.M. Sunday, Mr. Thomas was in radio conversation with a westbound Pan American pilot, according to Robert Charlton, at his communications center here. Mr. Charlton said that Mr. Thomas "was answering some questions, was very anxious to get back on the air, and rate of speed," and was "behind schedule due to rain activity the first day.

But then, Mr. Charlton said, there "appeared to have been a 'ionization of his electrical system.' The next word came more than 18 hours later, when a Rome-bound Atlanta flight from Kennedy Airport flying about 400 miles south of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, near Sable Island, reported that it had heard Mr. Thomas.

The pilot and first officer heard "a very weak communication" two or three times in a half-hour period, when Mr. Thomas gave his name and identification number while trying to call a scheduled eastbound Pan American flight.

"According to the pilot, even though there were storms in the area, his voice was very calm," Amreea Sogto, Atlanta traffic manager here, said later. James Arvey, a Pan American spokesman, said a Pan American pilot had also heard Mr. Thomas talking.

Senators McGovern and Goldwater, ABC's newest convention commentators, talk about TV's influence on politics

By Michael Ryan

A new dimension is being added to television coverage of the national political conventions this summer: two former Presidential candidates, both senators and one-time major-party Presidential nominees, are joining the regular ABC News team as commentators. Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), the 1964 Republican nominee, will help cover the Democratic convention in July, and Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.), the 1972 Democratic standard-bearer, will work the Republican convention in August. Each will receive $25,000 for his work. TV GUIDE recently interviewed both men; following are some of their thoughts on television and politics.

Q: What would you say was the effect that television had on your campaigns?

McGovern: I thought television was essential to my winning the nomination in 1972. I was a comparatively unknown candidate. First, I had to establish a grass-roots organization. Once that was in place, then it became important for the voters to know who I was. That was done through a combination of public-service television—when I was interviewed on the Today show, Issues and Answers, Face the Nation and so on—plus paid television human-interest spots. I think the combination was rather effective.

Where I think television did us in was in the general election, where I was exposed to television under rather unflattering circumstances. I don't think that there was any plot or anything of that sort. But I would be out on the hustings somewhere with my hair blowing in the wind—what little hair I have—and there'd be a bad lighting situation at maybe 10 o'clock at night, with the cameras off at a 45-degree angle from me and 10 feet below me, and I'd be trying to hammer home some point. What came across to the viewer, I think, was a picture of some kind of a desperate, frantic candidate, out there trying to awaken the Nation to something it didn't want to be awakened to.

Nixon was much wiser in the way he used television. He was seldom exposed except under ideal lighting conditions. He was calm, had on a clean shirt, fresh shave, and was shown responding to two or three thoughtful questions. The contrast was pathetic, and devastating to me.

Goldwater: My situation was different from George's. I was very well-known in the party. Getting the nomination was never any worry; so television didn't play any really big part. I was up against an incumbent, though, and if I had been elected I would have been the third President in about two-and-a-half years.

In television, I don't think there was any organized effort to help me; there wasn't any organized effort to help me, either. For example, I'm a gun collector. I make guns. But I was pictured as a dangerous one to have his finger near the red button. I remember one television show opened up with the door knocker on my apartment, which is an old brass six-shooter. At another interview, in my home in Phoenix, in my library—which is probably the biggest private library on Arizona and Northern Mexico in existence—I had one book titled "The Six-Gun." That was the only book they centered on in the whole place.

Q: Would you agree that the American people get most of their ideas of a President's personality and effectiveness from his television appearances?

Goldwater: I would agree with that. When the President wants to make a point, I don't care who the President is, he goes on national television; you get a lot of reaction to that. If he just makes a decision at the White House and it's reported, the reaction is less than mediocre.

Q: Does television make the incumbent unbeatable?

Goldwater: He can do himself a lot of good. I don't like to rehearse, but if you go over your cue cards three or four times, and you have people who know lighting, who know camera angles, you've got a decided advantage.

McGovern: I'd agree with that. I think television is a great tool in the hands of an incumbent. The White House is just an enormous advantage. There's an aura of glory and grandeur about it and the television camera can pick that up. The big seal and the Oval Room—these are very impressive to a lot of Americans. They don't want the Presidency assailed by anybody.

Q: Both of you ran campaigns with a very strong emphasis on issues. Can TV adequately convey issues?

Goldwater: Well, if it were up to what the candidate himself says, and not what the interpretation by the commentators says, I would say yes that the candidate could have a very decided effect. But when you have a commentator or two on each network or each radio station, immediately after you have said what you wanted to say, telling the public what you really said, I think they may destroy a lot of the good that you might do.

McGovern: Let me register one beef from my own campaign. There were times when we would have a great rally where local leaders would tell us, "This is the biggest crowd we've ever seen at Cleveland Airport!" Or, "This is the biggest crowd we've ever had at Post Office Square in Boston!" I would turn on the television set later to see the enormous throng, and, well, there would be a 15-second spot of me addressing this crowd. Then, under some kind of curious interpretation of the equal-time rule, since Nixon was not campaigning, they would pick up some guy along the fence who would say, "I think McGovern stinks."

And this would be the way the program would end—or "McGovern said this, but a disgruntled former Democrat interviewed by our roving reporter said this." And then they had some jerk get up and say that I was too radical for him or that I couldn't make up my mind on the issues. What the viewer was left with was a final negative image. It happened repeatedly during the campaign.

Goldwater: Those are the little things that can happen when a television reporter is not friendly with your views. I remember in Memphis, I think, we had the biggest turnout they'd ever had in history, and the television reporter said it was a "moderate-sized crowd." I think there were 225,000. I had the same thing in Atlanta, and just as George said, they'd wander around until they found somebody who said "That Goldwater's an S.O.B." I once said that if I believed all I heard on television and radio that was said about me, I would have voted against the S.O.B. myself.

Q: Senator McGovern, it was said that you made poor use of television at the 1972 convention.

McGovern: That's a fair criticism. It was an unstructured and uncontrolled convention situation. It's ridiculous to have the nominee give his acceptance speech at 3 o'clock in the morning. The trouble is that we had been the outsiders and challengers so long that when we actually won the nomination, we weren't prepared for victory. I should have simply got hold of [then chairman of the Democratic National Committee] Larry O'Brien and said, "Look, I want that acceptance speech on the air no later than 10 o'clock; that's it."

Q: Has TV changed conventions?

Goldwater: Oh Lord, yes. You know the tube's always up there looking. I guess 1952 was the first big year of television, but it's at the point now where everybody is absolutely perfect. They're in their seats; you rarely see anybody drunk. You might see some people sleeping, which you do, and that might be the effect of drink, but today conventions are very tame affairs. Before, you might have had an argument, there might be a fist-fight, always obviously people drinking, having a good time. Today, it's serious business.

McGovern: Going back to my criticism of our own timing of the acceptance speech: outside of that, while it is fair to say that we showed a lot of things on prime time that perhaps aroused some anxieties, frankly that '72 Democratic convention was an honest, straightforward expression of what people were thinking. I think some of that came across.

Q: Does the convention work more smoothly because television is there?

Goldwater: I think so. You now have the advantage that you didn't have a few years ago of a highly portable camera. This lets you get around to caucuses where you couldn't get before. It lets you look in sometimes on the meetings that are being held, talking about Vice Presidential candidates, talking about this or that. I'd just as soon stay home and watch the convention as be there.

McGovern: The truth of the matter is, you sometimes have to turn on a television set to find out what the hell is going on. With eight or 10 trained reporters covering every aspect of not only the convention hall but the key headquarters of the various candidates, they're feeding into that control room more coverage to the television viewer than any one of the delegates is going to get sitting there on the floor. They've got those cameras in the key hotels where the major candidates are, and they're following various activities that you can't see from the convention floor. I found repeatedly at conventions that when I really wanted to get an update on exactly where we were at, I had to go to my room and turn on the television set.

Q: Do you find the quality of broadcast journalism as good as print?

Goldwater: That's a very interesting question. After my campaign, I asked men I knew, like Harry Reasoner, Walter Cronkite and others, and they made a very good answer. They said, "Look, no matter how we may feel about you, whether we like you or don't like you, we can't hide that fact from our eyes or our tone of voice." In that effect, I think they do show discrimination, but I think it's natural. I think they try to do the best job. If I have any criticism of average coverage, it's that there are not enough men who've ever been in the political game, who know what they're talking about. They don't know what a candidate goes through: 18 hours a day. I made 16 speeches one day—that was my record—from Lubbock, Texas, to the Gulf of Mexico. You're so tired, you even get to the point where you wonder, "Good Lord, what did I just say?"

McGovern: That's one of the constant problems in campaigning—the fatigue factor. As I think back on it, I see that most of the mistakes that I made were made when I was tired. I think that's true of most candidates, and that's going to come across more in the visual medium than in the written media.

I'd say this, though: I've seen more bias and personal vendettas from syndicated columnists, who supposedly have a chance to think these things over, than I have from television commentators. I think the television commentators are under the restraint of knowing that they are publicly licensed and that they are supposed to be objective. The syndicated columnists somehow think they have a license to say anything they damn please. Once they have it in for you, even though you may not understand the bias of it, they can make life miserable for you. I've had two or three of them whom I would gladly dump over the nearest cliff if I had the power to do it.

Q: Senator Goldwater mentioned his feeling that there should be more people who had been in politics on television. Do you think that you will start a trend?

McGovern: It depends on how well we do. My guess is that it will be in the future. If we do it well, and I think we will, I have no doubt that other networks will do the same thing.
